mobile applications, UI/UX design and digital marketing, supported by client reviews and a quality ranking matrix built on analysis of company operations. That work continues as Scrums.com Research, with expanded coverage of software delivery, AI and engineering teams. "Coding agents make software engineering delivery decisions, and those decisions run on data, who builds well, where, and to what standard," said Gerald Neves, CEO of Scrums.com. "TechLeaders spent years building that training data across 100 cities. We're bringing the research inside the software engineering orchestration platform."

All existing TechLeaders resources remain available through Scrums.com, with the acquisition record published at scrums.com/resources/techleaders. Going forward, TechLeaders research combines with Scrums.com Research, the Heartbeat report series and Developer Intelligence data from the Scrums.com platform, powering new rankings and insights focused on predictable delivery outcomes across talent, teams, delivery, infrastructure and AI agents.
