Hosted by Nile Livingston, Founder and CEO of Creative Repute, alongside co-host Kristina Hernandez, the episode explores how leaders can navigate uncertainty without compromising their values.

This conversation is about more than leadership. It's about how we choose to show up for our communities, our organizations, and one another during moments that test us the most.”

Nile Livingston, Founder of Creative Repute

Throughout the discussion, Dr. McGlonn shares lessons drawn from her experience as an educator, social entrepreneur, and author, offering practical insights for business owners, nonprofit leaders, creatives, and anyone striving to lead with integrity.

"Leadership isn't about waiting for circumstances to improve," said Dr. McGlonn during the conversation. "It's about protecting your optimism, discovering your front line, and choosing where you'll make a meaningful contribution."

The conversation examines topics including:

- Leading with moral courage during uncertain times
- Building businesses rooted in purpose instead of profit alone
- Ethical marketing and authentic storytelling
- Sustainable entrepreneurship and community impact
- Balancing technology with human connection
- Protecting optimism without ignoring reality
- Discovering your personal "front line" for meaningful action
- The responsibility of leadership in shaping the future

The episode also highlights Dr. McGlonn's newest publication, The Leader's Work, a 382-page leadership workbook designed to help readers cultivate resilience, reflection, and intentional action. Layout and cover designed by Creative Repute, the workbook provides practical exercises that encourage readers to strengthen their internal leadership while serving their communities.

"Dr. Kimberly reminds us that lasting impact begins long before people see the results," said Nile Livingston. "This conversation is about more than leadership. It's about how we choose to show up for our communities, our organizations, and one another during moments that test us the most."

During the episode, Dr. McGlonn also reflects on her journey building Grant Blvd, one of North America's first Black-led B Corp fashion companies, discusses the realities of ethical entrepreneurship, and explains why sustainable leadership requires investing in people as much as products.

The episode is now available on Spotify and other major podcast platforms.
