"Changes Will Come" Release Date set for July 25th, 2026 — Songwriter and producer Jeff Willie Wilson proudly announces the release of his 9th single, "Changes Will Come," a moving and emotional song about leaving the past behind, embracing personal growth, and finding strength through life's most difficult transitions.

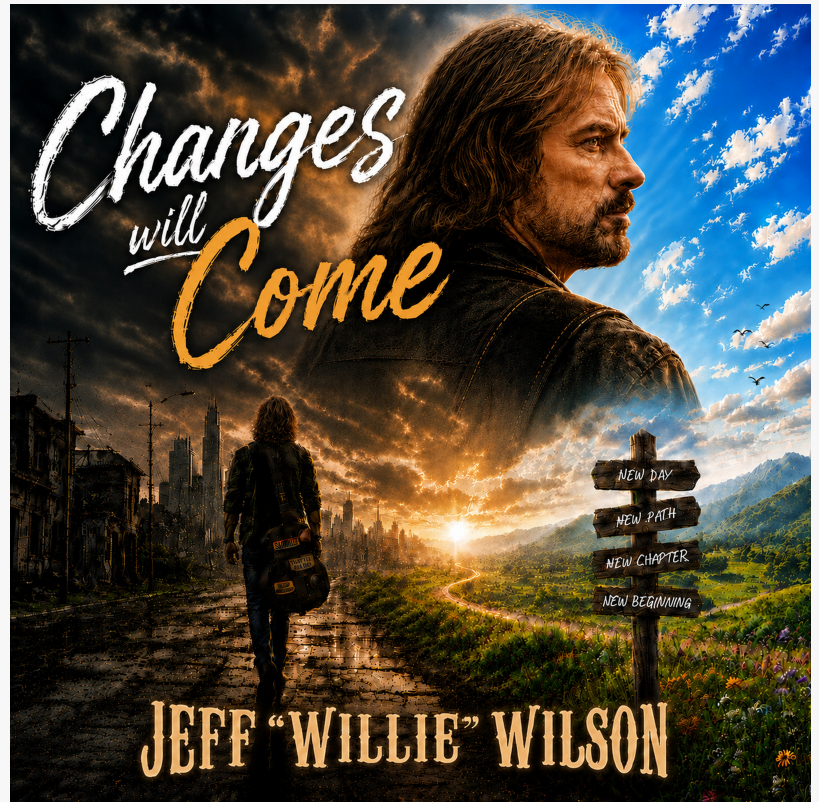

Penned under his name Jeff Willie Wilson, "Changes Will Come" tells a powerful story of reflection, resilience, and new beginnings. The song speaks to the emotional weight of leaving behind the streets, memories, struggles, and experiences that helped shape a person's soul. With honest lyrics about scars, tears, love, loss, and perseverance, Wilson captures the bittersweet truth that growth often requires change.

At the heart of the song is a message of courage: change may break the heart, but it can also open the door to a greater future. Lines such as "What I leave behind first made me start" and "Cause, I carry you when the changes come" reflect the song's central theme of honoring the past while moving forward with faith, determination, and self-belief.

Bringing Jeff's vision for "Changes Will Come" to life is a talented team of musicians whose performances add depth, emotion, and soul to the recording. Jeff is joined by Bryan Savage on saxophone, Gene Black on guitar, Paul Eastwood on bass, Quinn Shaw on guitar, Natural Phil on drums, and Derrick Harvin on keyboards.

In addition to writing the song, Jeff Willie Wilson serves as coproducer along with producer Derrick Harvin who also contributes on piano and the Hammond B3, helping shape the sound and emotional direction of the track.
