“

Most homeowners want to do the right things before they sell. The problem is they are often guessing.”

Jeremy Fishnick, Fishnick Realty Advisors

announced the launch of Home Value Maximizer, a seller-focused planning tool designed to help homeowners across Wisconsin's 608 area make smarter decisions before listing their home.

For many homeowners, the hardest part of preparing to sell is knowing where to start. Should they remodel, paint, stage, repair, declutter, replace flooring, or leave certain items alone?

Home Value Maximizer was created to help answer that question with more clarity.

The tool gives homeowners a practical way to think through their property, timeline, condition, photos, budget, buyer expectations, and likely selling strategy before they spend money on improvements that may or may not help.

"Most homeowners want to do the right things before they sell," said Jeremy Fishnick of Fishnick Realty Advisors. "The problem is they are often guessing. Home Value Maximizer gives them a better starting point before they waste time, money, or energy on the wrong projects."

Fishnick, a local real estate advisor and licensed home inspector, said the goal is to help sellers prepare with more confidence.

Some homes benefit from targeted updates. Others need cleaning, staging, better presentation, or a stronger pricing and marketing plan. In some cases, the smartest decision is not to remodel at all.

"More work does not always mean more money," Fishnick said. "The right plan depends on the home, the market, the seller's timeline, and what buyers are actually going to care about."

Home Value Maximizer is especially useful for homeowners who are thinking about selling but are not ready to call an agent, schedule showings, or commit to listing. It gives them a way to begin planning before pressure enters the process.
