Meet Jessica Wright:

Jessica Wright is an author, teacher, and emerging spiritual thought leader whose work explores how faith, intention, and love—practiced daily—can quietly transform both individual lives and the world we share.

A devoted wife and mother of two daughters, Jessica's philosophy has been shaped through family life, nearly a decade of homeschooling, and years of contemplative study of scripture, spiritual wisdom, and lived experience. In the process of guiding her children, she found herself being shaped as well, developing a grounded, faith-centered approach to life rooted in personal responsibility, inner alignment, and service to others.

Jessica is currently writing a book— Home Grown, which invites readers to return to the simple but often forgotten truth that meaningful change begins within. By cultivating ourselves with conscious tools and daily practices, she explores how tending to our spiritual and physical well-being equips us to show up in the world with greater clarity, compassion, and courage— to truly live well. Those same values uphold her rising lifestyle brand, A Home Grown Life, which is poised to help families all over the world thrive and grow together.

She is also the founder of World Peace Core, an emerging organization built on a deeply hopeful belief: if each of us intentionally includes the world in our daily prayers, we can help shift the collective atmosphere toward peace. World Peace Core is not about ideology, but about shared humanity, presence, and the quiet power of collective intention.

Raised along the coast of Southern California and now living in Tennessee, Jessica draws inspiration from nature, faith, family, and community. Whether through writing, teaching, or building World Peace Core, her work is guided by a steady mission—to remind people that peace begins within, love is an active practice, and each of us has a role to play in helping the world blossom.
