Harmony Painting of Denver, Colorado is now an EPA Lead-Safe Certified Firm (Certificate NAT-F341962-1), certified to perform renovation, repair and painting work in pre-1978 homes and child-occupied facilities.

Families can hire us for an older home knowing the work will be done to the federal standard.”

The EPA issues the Lead-Safe Certified Firm credential under its Renovation, Repair and Painting (RRP) Rule, which requires that firms performing work that disturbs paint in homes built before 1978, as well as in childcare facilities and schools, be certified and follow lead-safe work practices. Harmony Painting is certified for purposes of Section 402 of the Toxic Substances Control Act, and the certification is valid in all EPA-administered states, tribes and territories.

The credential carries particular weight in Denver, where a large share of the housing stock predates 1978, the year the federal government banned consumer use of lead-based paint. Older neighborhoods across the metro area, from historic Victorians to mid-century ranches, may contain layers of lead-based paint beneath newer finishes. When that paint is sanded, scraped or otherwise disturbed during renovation or repainting, it can release lead dust that is hazardous to children and adults. Certified firms are trained to contain work areas, minimize dust and clean up thoroughly so that painting projects in older homes can be completed safely.

"So many of the homes we paint in Denver were built long before 1978, and homeowners deserve to know the crew working on their house understands how to handle lead paint safely," said Spencer Melfi, founder and CEO of Harmony Painting. "This certification formalizes the careful preparation we have always believed in. Families can hire us for an older home knowing the work will be done to the federal standard."

Harmony Painting holds a 4.9-star rating on Google based on more than 250 customer reviews.
