Christiansons Ltd Named Global 100 2026 Winner in Audit, Accountancy and Taxation

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, August 3, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Christiansons Ltd Named Global 100 2026 Winner in Audit, Accountancy and Taxation

Global 100 – 2026 has named Christiansons Ltd the winner in the category of Audit, Accountancy and Taxation, recognising the firm's work supporting business growth with specialist expertise in inheritance tax (IHT) planning, group reconstructions and broader UK taxation—alongside a strong audit offering for a wide range of clients.

For Christiansons Ltd, the award underscores a positioning that is increasingly attractive in the mid-market: a medium-sized firm acting for large-firm clients. As businesses and wealth groups face complex, fast-moving tax and reporting obligations, the firm's focus on practical planning—particularly in high-value family and group structures—has become a defining part of its proposition.

Award recognition aligned with a growth agenda

The theme for this Global 100 – 2026 magazine feature is business growth, and Christiansons Ltd points to the way it has built specialist capabilities designed to protect and organise wealth, while also helping groups restructure efficiently and stay compliant as they expand.

The firm's key message to readers is clear: Christiansons Ltd specialises in inheritance tax planning, group reconstructions and general taxation. In practice, this combination is often central to growth—particularly for wealth groups with multiple trading entities, investment assets, intergenerational planning needs and governance requirements that must evolve as value increases.

In awarding Christiansons Ltd this category win, Global 100 recognises the firm's ability to unite technical accountancy and tax expertise with an approach that reflects how real businesses operate: structured groups, shifting ownership dynamics, and a need to plan years ahead rather than simply respond at year-end.

Specialist tax planning for complex ownership and wealth

Christiansons Ltd identifies inheritance tax planning through group reconstructions and the provision of trusts as a standout area of work. For many high-net-worth families and wealth groups, effective IHT planning is not a single transaction; it is an ongoing process that touches the architecture of a group, the balance between operating and investment entities, and the frameworks used to transfer value while maintaining control and continuity.

For groups holding substantial assets—particularly those at or above the firm's stated target of £10m in assets—the scale of exposure and the complexity of structures can make planning both sensitive and consequential. In this context, Christiansons Ltd focuses on supporting clients with strategic thinking, robust documentation, and a clear emphasis on compliance and practicality.

The firm notes that group reconstructions can be an important mechanism in this work, helping clients reshape how entities relate to one another, how value is held, and how future changes—whether succession, investment, or disposal—can be executed with clarity and efficiency. Trusts may also play a role, depending on objectives and the broader legal and tax landscape, and Christiansons Ltd positions its services to help clients understand options and implement them in a controlled manner.

Combining audit, accountancy and taxation under one roof

In addition to its tax specialism, Christiansons Ltd confirms it provides auditing services to a large group of clients. In a market where stakeholders increasingly rely on high-quality reporting—banks, investors, boards and regulators alike—assurance can be a catalyst for growth. Strong audits support confidence and can enable better financing outcomes, smoother transactions and more resilient governance.

For many groups, audit and tax are intertwined: structural changes can affect reporting obligations, and strategic decisions can influence both taxation and financial statement presentation. By offering audit, accountancy and taxation expertise within a unified practice, Christiansons Ltd aims to help clients coordinate decisions and reduce friction between advisory workstreams.

Serving "large-firm" clients with a medium-sized firm mindset

One of Christiansons Ltd's differentiators, as described in the questionnaire, is that it is a medium-sized firm with large firm clients. That positioning suggests a service model that combines the responsiveness and partner access often associated with mid-sized practices, while engaging with the sophistication and complexity of larger enterprises and wealth groups.

For clients, this can translate into clearer communication, tighter project ownership, and continuity of relationship—factors that can be especially important when work involves sensitive family planning, governance discussions, and long-term structural decisions. At the same time, the scope of engagements reflects the needs of larger clients: multi-entity groups, substantial asset bases and requirements that extend beyond routine compliance.

Dr Costas A Joannou Chairman of Christiansons said: “We are delighted to be recognised as a Global 100 – 2026 winner in Audit, Accountancy and Taxation. Our work is focused on helping clients grow with confidence—through specialist inheritance tax planning, thoughtful group reconstructions and dependable audit and compliance support. This award reflects the trust our clients place in us and our commitment to delivering technically strong, practical advice.”

Impact for the ideal audience: planning for £10m+ wealth groups

Christiansons Ltd is explicit about who it serves best: wealth groups with at least £10m of assets where inheritance tax considerations are a central planning concern. For these clients, technical excellence is essential—but so is discretion, disciplined execution and a clear understanding of the trade-offs that can accompany restructuring and succession planning.

In many cases, growth introduces complexity that can leave groups exposed if their structures do not keep pace. Christiansons Ltd’s focus on reconstructions and trusts, alongside general taxation and audit services, is positioned to help ensure that growth is accompanied by the right frameworks—so expansion, investment and future transitions can be handled in an orderly way.

By being recognised in the Global 100 – 2026 awards, the firm aims to increase awareness among business owners, finance leaders and wealth decision-makers who are seeking a partner with specialist tax capability and a full-service understanding of audit and accountancy requirements.

Looking ahead

As the UK business environment continues to evolve—driven by changing regulations, economic uncertainty and shifting expectations around governance—professional advice that is both specialist and grounded becomes more valuable. Christiansons Ltd’s emphasis on inheritance tax planning, reconstructions and trusts reflects a forward-looking view of growth: one that considers not only the next transaction or reporting cycle, but the enduring structure of a group and the long-term stewardship of assets.
