Webolutions Digital Marketing Agency 30+ Years Strong

The dotCOMM Awards is an international competition honoring excellence in web creativity and digital communication. AMCP, one of the largest and most respected evaluators of creative work in the marketing and communication industry, has judged more than 325,000 entries since 1994. Judges evaluate each entry on its own quality, creativity, and resourcefulness rather than in direct comparison to other entries. Entries scoring 90 to 100 points receive a Platinum Award, entries scoring 80 to 89 points receive a Gold Award, and entries scoring 70 to 79 points receive an Honorable Mention.

We're honored to be recognized for our work on these websites.”

“We're honored to be recognized for our work on these websites,” said John Vachalek, CEO and founder of Webolutions. “These two website projects were very different, and each had a unique set of goals for organizations in completely different industries. Receiving these dotCOMM awards is rewarding because it reflects the excellent outcome we achieved for our clients on these projects. We're excited to help both organizations grow and thrive for years to come."

Webolutions led a complete rebrand and website redesign for INKA, which has spent more than five decades under the name NANDA. The organization is dedicated to advancing nursing knowledge and nursing diagnosis classification worldwide. The project required Webolutions to manage every phase of the process, from the initial rebranding discussions through the development of new branding concepts and materials. Webolutions then built the site's information architecture, conducted keyword research, and designed the full website to reflect the organization's new identity as INKA.

PMMC, based in Charlotte, North Carolina, helps more than 550 hospitals and health systems increase revenue through accurate data and actionable financial insights. Webolutions managed the full scope of the company's website project, including building the site's information architecture as well as all website design and development work.

Webolutions has a long history of recognition for its creative and strategic work. They've received multiple Hermes and Communicator Awards over the past ten years, most recently earning two Communicator awards in 2026 for client website design projects.
