

Venezuela Energy Week Moves to February 2027 as Global Investment Engagement Expands

CARACAS, VENEZUELA, August 6, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Venezuela Energy Week 2027 – the country's largest-ever international energy investment summit – will now take place in Caracas from February 22–25, 2027, moving from its previously announced dates of October 26–29, 2026, following expanded engagement with international investors, energy companies and industry stakeholders exploring opportunities across Venezuela's energy sector.

The February 2027 timeframe reflects growing international investor interest in Venezuela's hydrocarbons sector, with the summit building on outreach efforts that are translating commercial momentum into investment opportunities across upstream development, infrastructure modernization, gas monetization and downstream expansion. The event is expected to serve as the venue for the signing of key commercial agreements that will help advance investment and project development across Venezuela's energy sector. Recent hydrocarbon reforms introduced in July 2026 have further shaped this investment landscape, strengthening the framework for private-sector participation and creating greater clarity around commercial opportunities for international partners.

"The decision to bring Venezuela Energy Week to February 2027 reflects the growing interest from international investors and industry partners in Venezuela's energy sector. This event is designed to accelerate investment, strengthen strategic partnerships and convert market interest into tangible projects that support the country's long-term energy development," said Paula Henao, Minister of Hydrocarbons of Venezuela.

Officially supported by Venezuela's Ministry of Hydrocarbons and national oil company PDVSA, Venezuela Energy Week 2027 will bring together U.S., Venezuelan and international oil companies, investors, financiers and service providers to advance investment discussions and commercial agreements across one of the world's largest hydrocarbon resource bases.

Since the event was first announced, Venezuela Energy Week has expanded its engagement with the international energy community. The London Industry Showcase, held in July 2026, strengthened investor engagement around opportunities in Venezuela's energy sector, while the upcoming Houston Industry Showcase continues to build commercial interest among U.S. energy companies, service providers and technical partners ahead of the February summit.

Venezuela holds more than 300 billion barrels of proven oil reserves – the largest globally – alongside more than 195 trillion cubic feet of natural gas resources. With production now recovering to 1.2 million barrels per day, the country is pursuing a long-term strategy to further restore output through phased investment, field rehabilitation and increased private-sector participation.

The investment opportunity is supported by significant brownfield potential across Venezuela's major producing regions, including the Orinoco Oil Belt, Maracaibo Basin and Eastern Venezuela Basin. Opportunities span mature field redevelopment, enhanced recovery programs, drilling campaigns, heavy crude upgrading and infrastructure modernization.

Beyond upstream development, Venezuela Energy Week 2027 will highlight opportunities across refining, logistics, storage and gas infrastructure. Underutilized refining capacity, constrained midstream systems and significant natural gas resources create potential entry points for companies seeking to support the modernization of Venezuela's energy value chain. Offshore developments such as the Dragon and Cocuina-Manakin fields represent potential growth areas for regional gas supply and future LNG opportunities, while expanded gas capture, processing and transportation infrastructure will be critical to maximizing the value of Venezuela's resources.

As global energy markets continue to prioritize supply security and access to large-scale resources, Venezuela Energy Week 2027 is positioned to serve as a catalyst for investment, bringing together government leaders, investors and industry executives to convert commercial interest into long-term energy projects.

The summit is organized by Energy Capital & Power.
