technology is preserving and sharing the knowledge of golf's greatest teachers with audiences regardless of location.

Long before online coaching became commonplace, Toski helped redefine how golf was taught. A five-time PGA Tour winner and the 1954 PGA Tour Leading Money Winner, he later built one of golf's most influential teaching careers, founding the Golf Digest Instruction Schools and becoming the first living instructor inducted into the World Golf Teachers Hall of Fame. His emphasis on athletic movement and feel over rigid mechanics continues to influence coaches around the world.

"Bob is the reason instructors are able to make a living teaching the game of golf," said Mike Malaska. "His ideas changed the profession, and his passion for helping golfers has never slowed down."

The event highlights how digital technology is enabling legendary educators to continue reaching audiences well beyond traditional classrooms and clinics. Broadcasting live from separate locations in Arizona and Florida, Malaska and Toski will discuss golf instruction, share stories from decades in the game, and answer questions from viewers around the world.

For many golfers and instructors, the event represents a rare opportunity to hear firsthand from one of the figures widely credited with shaping modern golf instruction.
