

TDL Custom Highlights Nearly 30 Years of Custom Millwork Expertise in Chicago

The studio combines precision fabrication, mixed-material knowledge, and sustainable material options for residential and commercial projects.

CHICAGO, IL, UNITED STATES, August 6, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- TDL Custom, a Chicago-based custom furniture and millwork studio, is highlighting nearly 30 years of fabrication experience and the depth of knowledge behind its residential and commercial millwork projects. Serving homeowners, architects, interior designers, and general contractors, the studio brings design, engineering, fabrication, and installation expertise together to create precisely fitted cabinetry, furniture, and architectural millwork for distinctive Chicago spaces.

Custom millwork has long been central to TDL Custom's work. Paul Schulman brings decades of experience spanning design, construction, project management, and highly customized millwork, allowing the studio to evaluate each project from both a creative and technical perspective. This extensive background helps the team identify practical solutions, anticipate installation challenges, and translate complex drawings or early concepts into finished work that fits the intended space.

Although wood remains the foundation of the studio's fabrication work, nearly three decades of custom building have also given the team substantial experience integrating other materials. TDL Custom can develop pieces that combine wood with metal, glass, stone, specialty hardware, and composite elements while maintaining consistency across the complete design. This mixed-material knowledge is particularly valuable for projects involving unusual dimensions, detailed architectural conditions, or specifications that cannot be fulfilled through standard cabinetry and furniture options.

For clients who prioritize environmentally conscious materials, TDL Custom also offers a greener millwork option using FSC-certified wood, formaldehyde-free sheet goods, and no-VOC water-based finishes. These selections can be discussed during the planning process, allowing the studio to balance sustainability goals with the appearance, performance, and fabrication requirements of the project.

"Our foundation is custom millwork, and nearly 30 years of fabrication experience have taught us that every project requires its own combination of design thinking, technical knowledge, and careful execution," said Paul Schulman of TDL Custom. "Whether we are working entirely in wood or coordinating several different materials, our goal is to create something that feels intentional, functions properly, and belongs in the space. Our sustainable option gives clients another way to align that work with the priorities that matter to them.”

TDL Custom’s full-service approach allows design development, fabrication, and installation to remain closely coordinated. Keeping these stages connected reduces unnecessary handoffs and gives clients, architects, and contractors a consistent point of accountability throughout the project. Drawings, dimensions, materials, finishes, hardware, and site conditions can be reviewed as part of one coordinated process before the finished work is installed.

The studio applies this approach across residential and commercial projects, including custom kitchens, built-in cabinetry, bathroom vanities, furniture, storage solutions, office interiors, retail environments, and larger architectural millwork packages. Each project is developed around the dimensions, use, and visual character of the individual space rather than a fixed catalog of standard products.

Homeowners and design professionals interested in TDL Custom’s millwork experience, mixed-material fabrication capabilities, or sustainable material options can explore the studio’s portfolio and background through the TDL Custom website. Project inquiries, drawings, specifications, and material questions can also be submitted directly to begin a conversation with the studio.

Our foundation is wood and always has been, but nearly 30 years of building custom pieces has taught us that the best solution for a client’s space sometimes calls for a mix of materials and processes. The sustainable millwork option we offer reflects the same principle: we are not limiting what we can build, we are simply giving clients a path to commission work they feel good about long after installation.
