

Razzli Launches Nationwide, Giving Everyone a Seat at the Bar

The First Nightlife Discovery App Built for the Way People Actually Go Out Today

SEATTLE, WA, UNITED STATES, August 10, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Going out has always been about the people, the place, and the feeling of a good night that lingers into the next morning. For many, one thing has gotten in the way: not knowing where to go when alcohol isn't part of the plan.

Razzli was built to fix that. Founded by Rhea Bez and available now on iOS and Android, Razzli is a nightlife and venue discovery platform that helps people find restaurants, bars, and social spaces with genuinely great alcohol-free options, not an afterthought menu, and not a Shirley Temple handed over with a shrug, but real, considered, elevated experiences worth going out for.

An estimated one in three Americans is actively moderating or abstaining from alcohol, yet many say they have had difficulty knowing where they would actually feel welcome without a drink in hand. Bez built Razzli because she experienced that gap firsthand. A background in interior design taught her that spaces have the power to make people feel included or invisible. She wanted to continue going out - to be present for the dinners, the late nights, the celebrations - but couldn't find a way to know, before walking in the door, whether a venue would meet her there. So she built one.

"People don't go out for drinks, they go out for experiences," Bez said. "Razzli is your guide to find yours."

Razzli is not a sobriety app or a wellness platform, and it doesn't ask users to explain themselves. It is a nightlife app built for the reality that going out looks different for different people on different nights, and that everyone deserves a great one. Whether someone is a year into sobriety, three months pregnant, training for something, or simply not feeling it that night, Razzli aims to put them in the room, drink in hand, on their own terms.

The app launches with coverage across New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, and Seattle, with national expansion planned from day one. Venues are surfaced based on the quality and intentionality of their alcohol-free offerings - not just whether they technically have something on the menu, but whether it has actually been thought through. That difference matters most to the person placing the order.

Razzli is available now for download on iOS and Android. More information is available at razzli.com | @razzli
