

UK Music Artist Tommy Stoneberg Releases New Single "Uberman"

The track turns a late-night rideshare trip into a story about the driver behind the wheel.

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, August 10, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- London-based singer-songwriter Tommy Stoneberg has released his new single, "Uberman", available now on major streaming platforms. The song follows his previous release, "World on Fire", and tells the story of a late-night rideshare trip through the eyes of a passenger who starts to see the driver as the real protagonist of the night.

The title plays on two ideas at once. Uber is the ride-hailing app that shapes the plot, and Uberman nods to the philosophical term Übermensch, the figure who carries weight most people never notice. Stoneberg applies that idea to a driver working through the small hours, ferrying strangers home while his own story stays out of view.

Musically, "Uberman" keeps the melodic, story-driven sensibility that marked "World on Fire" while pushing into a fuller, more rhythmic arrangement. Verses move at the pace of city streets at night, and the chorus opens into a wider, more anthemic hook built around the title phrase. Stoneberg wrote and recorded the track in London, working through the mix over several sessions to match the song's late-night setting with a sound that stays warm rather than sparse. "Uberman" is now streaming on Spotify, Apple Music, and YouTube Music.

"I wanted to write about someone we all rely on but rarely think about," said Tommy Stoneberg. "Every driver has a life going on behind that ride. 'Uberman' is my way of giving that person the spotlight for three and a half minutes."

The single arrives as Stoneberg continues building on the momentum from "World on Fire", with more new material planned for release later this year.
