The firm also ranked No. 13 among legal companies nationwide, No. 2 among all companies in Greenville, No. 7 in South Carolina and No. 651 spot on the national list.

In the four short years since we started, discipline has led us to this result. We are proud to build a new kind of law firm that serves SC better and shows up for clients when they need us most.”

To make the Inc. 5000, a company must show verified revenue growth across three straight years and meet Inc.'s eligibility and verification standards. That's what makes the list one of the most trusted measures of growth for private companies in the country.

The firm's growth in South Carolina reflects a rising need for dedicated personal injury representation across the state, along with a steady investment in the people who serve those types of legal clients. Armada Law Injury Attorneys has grown its team of attorneys, paralegals, intake coordinators, and operations specialists, including several Spanish-speaking team members who work directly with South Carolina's Hispanic community. That expansion has allowed the firm to take on more cases while giving each client closer, more responsive attention.

But the real credit belongs to the team who turns that vision into reality and every single person here has a voice in how we build it," said Chris Carsten, founder of Armada Law Injury Attorneys. "Even in the four short years since we were established, discipline has led us to this result. We are proud to be building a new kind of law firm that serves our community better and shows up for clients when they need us most."

Being named No. 1 fastest-growing law firm in South Carolina to the Inc. 5000 places Armada Law Injury Attorneys among a nationally recognized group of companies known for rapid, sustained growth. For a firm built around showing up for its community, recognition reflects the trust injured South Carolinians have placed in the team, and the work that team does on their behalf.
