Published annually by Inc. magazine, the Inc. 5000 recognizes the fastest-growing privately owned companies in the United States based on three-year revenue growth. Inc. publicly announced its 2026 list today.

Out of the millions of privately held businesses nationwide, less than one-tenth of one percent earn a place on the list in any given year, and even fewer achieve the distinction five years in a row.

"Earning this recognition for a fifth consecutive year reflects the strength and dedication of our entire team," said Adam Unger, CEO of Accutech Systems. "Sustained growth does not happen by accident. It comes from listening to our clients, continuing to innovate, and staying committed to making great things happen for other people. I am incredibly proud of what our team has built together and excited about the opportunities ahead."

Founded in 1987, Accutech Systems began as a trust accounting and wealth management software provider for banks and financial services firms. Today, Accutech operates three distinct business units: Cheetah, which provides wealth and trust management technology; Moneytree, which delivers financial planning software; and Intersection, a full-service marketing and branding agency.

Together, these business units support Accutech's continued growth while allowing the company to serve organizations across the financial technology and marketing industries.
