Local entrepreneurs, e-commerce brands, remote workers, founders, and curious neighbors are all invited to attend.

“This event is our way of saying hello to St. Louis,” said Shannon Lerda, Co-Founder and President at Elevator. “We want people to walk in, grab a drink, meet the businesses already calling Elevator home, and see for themselves what co-warehousing looks like. Whether you’re running a growing business or just curious what’s behind the doors, come raise a toast with us on Thursday, August 20.”

The Commons: Shared kitchen, event, and common space

“St. Louis has real entrepreneurial energy, and the businesses here deserve spaces and a community that grows with them,” said Emiliano Lerda, CEO and Co-Founder at Elevator. “This is our second location in Missouri, and we’re proud to give local founders the infrastructure, flexibility, and community they need to operate, ship, and scale, all under one roof.”

Elevator combines warehouse space, private offices, and coworking under one roof, with month-to-month memberships, daily UPS, FedEx, and USPS pickups, shared loading docks, and a community of growing businesses. The St. Louis facility is one of five Elevator locations across Nebraska, Iowa, and Missouri, and its second in Missouri.

About Elevator

Founded in 2021 by Shannon and Emiliano Lerda, Elevator provides flexible, shared workspace for businesses that need more than a desk. Combining warehouse, office, and coworking space under one roof, Elevator gives members the infrastructure they need to operate, ship, and grow without the burden of traditional commercial leases. Inspired by their own e-commerce journey, the Lerdas created Elevator to help small businesses with physical goods grow inside a collaborative, resource-rich community. Elevator operates five locations across Nebraska, Iowa, and Missouri. Learn more at elevatorspace.com.
