

Luxury Aircraft Launches Corporate Accounts for Flight Departments, Executive Assistants & Travel Departments

New account structure gives entire scheduling teams shared visibility into every trip, with a named Charter Specialist assigned to each company.

MELBOURNE, FL, UNITED STATES, August 17, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Luxury Aircraft today announced the launch of Corporate Accounts, a new account structure built for corporate flight departments, executive assistants, and family offices that arrange private aviation for more than one traveler.

Corporate Private Jet

Corporate flying has always involved more than one person. An executive assistant arranges the trip. A director of aviation sources supplemental lift when the fleet is down. A second assistant covers while the first is out of the office. The person on board is rarely the person who booked it, and the person who pays is rarely either of them.

Flight departments do not have a flying problem. They have a coverage problem. Assistants, family offices, and schedulers each work differently. We built this to match how they already operate.”

Joseph Catanese, Co-Founder

Until now, private jet charter and flight platforms have treated every trip as a single traveler booking a single flight. Corporate Accounts is built for how these teams actually operate.

Built for the teams that manage flying

With a corporate or family office account, every member of a company's travel or flight operations team has their own individual login while working from one shared company account. Every trip request, quote, and confirmed flight is visible to the entire team, so coverage does not break when the person who arranged a trip is traveling, off duty, or out of office.

The account also separates the roles that corporate flying requires. The person arranging a trip, the person traveling and signing the agreement, and the party being billed can each be different, and are set independently on every flight. Loyalty points earned across every member accrue to one company balance rather than scattering across individual logins.

Each Corporate Account is assigned to a named Charter Specialist who is familiar with the company's principals, aircraft preferences, and standards. The Charter Specialist is also tasked with understanding any of the accounts SLA's (Service Level Agreements) or restrictions to ensure all aircraft are within the company's strict needs.

Supplemental lift without the search

The launch is aimed in particular at corporate flight departments sourcing supplemental lift. When an aircraft is down for maintenance, a trip outruns the fleet range, or multiple principals need to be in different cities on the same day, the department's scheduler works with a specialist who already knows the operation.

"Flight departments do not have a flying problem. They have a coverage problem," said Joseph Catanese, Co-Founder of Luxury Aircraft Solutions.

"Corporations, Executive Assistants and Family Offices all have different requirements and different ways of working. This structure allows us to work with them exactly how they need it."
