

Elliot Cohen Communications Earns National Recognition as Top Public Relations & Government Communications Firm in 2026

Gov Business Review honors firm for its work in strategic communications, public outreach and government communications

LAKE WORTH, FL, UNITED STATES, August 14, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Elliot Cohen Communications has earned national recognition as the Top Public Relations and Government Communications Consultancy Firm for 2026 by Gov Business Review, recognizing the firm's work helping municipalities, public agencies, businesses and organizations navigate complex communications challenges and effectively engage the communities they serve.

The national designation is featured in Gov Business Review's 2026 Public Relations and Government Communications Consultancy edition, which profiles Elliot Cohen Communications and its approach to strategic messaging, public outreach, reputation management and issue-driven communications.

"To receive national recognition for the work we do is incredibly meaningful," said Elliot Cohen, president of Elliot Cohen Communications. "Our firm has always been built around a simple principle: understand what the client ultimately needs to accomplish and then develop the communications strategy necessary to get there. Whether working with a municipality, a development project, or a private-sector client, our record of success is proof-positive we understand high-stakes outreach that moves public opinion."

Elliot Cohen Communications provides strategic communications and public relations services to municipalities, public agencies, businesses, developers and community organizations. The firm specializes in government and municipal communications, public education and outreach campaigns, community engagement, media relations, crisis communications, strategic messaging and communications surrounding complex or potentially controversial issues.

The Gov Business Review profile highlights the firm's philosophy of beginning with the client's ultimate objective rather than simply developing a message or communications product. That approach allows the firm to build comprehensive strategies that may incorporate direct public outreach, digital communications, traditional media, community meetings and other channels based on the audiences a client needs to reach.

The recognition comes at a time when municipalities and other organizations face an increasingly challenging communications environment. Governments, businesses and organizations need the ability to communicate directly with their audiences, explain complicated issues clearly and build public understanding rather than relying exclusively on traditional media to deliver their messages.

"Our job is not simply to generate publicity," Cohen said. "It is to understand what a client needs to accomplish, identify the audiences that matter and determine the most effective way to reach them. Effective communications can help build understanding, address misinformation and give people the information they need to make informed decisions."

Cohen brings decades of experience in journalism, public relations, government communications and community engagement to the firm. That background provides Elliot Cohen Communications with a perspective that combines an understanding of how government operates, how the media evaluates stories and how residents and stakeholders respond to issues that affect their communities.

The national recognition from Gov Business Review comes as Elliot Cohen Communications continues to expand its government, municipal, development and public-outreach work and pursue new opportunities with communities and organizations seeking experienced strategic communications counsel.
