The new sympathy page gathers passages the church has used at gravesides for centuries, with notes on when each fits, for people who do not know what to send.

NASHVILLE, TN, UNITED STATES, August 20, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The hardest message to write is the one to a friend who has just lost someone. Bible with Life has opened a sympathy collection for its personalized Scripture blessing songs, a page gathering passages the church has used at gravesides for centuries, each with a note on when it fits and what it is saying.

Nobody knows what to say at a funeral or a hospital bedside. Scripture has been carrying that weight for three thousand years.”

Benny Yu, Founder of Bible with Life

The page is built for people staring at an empty text box. Rather than searching for a verse under stress, a sender chooses from a short annotated list, enters the grieving person's name, and shares a song built around that passage through a private link.

"Nobody knows what to say at a funeral or a hospital bedside," said Benny Yu, founder of Bible with Life. "That is not a failure of character. It is that the situation is bigger than ordinary language. Scripture has been carrying that weight for three thousand years, and it does not need us to improve on it."

The platform is deliberate about tone in this category. The songs are not upbeat, do not promise outcomes, and carry no prompt to share them publicly. Songs created for sympathy, grief, healing, and comfort are kept private by default and are never displayed publicly or used to promote the platform.

The curation reflects a conviction about how Scripture comforts, Yu said: a verse about God's plans to prosper someone may be true and still be the wrong verse for a graveside. Fit matters, and fit is knowable.

Creating and sending a song is free. Sympathy is one of eight occasions the platform supports, and one of the first two, alongside birthdays, to receive a dedicated page with an annotated verse list.

Bible with Life also produces 45 animated Bible story films and 63 original worship tracks, all free to watch and stream, along with a free daily Bible verse email.

The sympathy collection is available at biblewithlife.com/blessing-songs/sympathy.
