"We are glad to have this matter resolved so we can keep our attention where it belongs," said Tyrone Squires, Founder and Managing Director of FiduciaryRx. "Our job is to help employers protect their pharmacy benefit dollars and hold the organizations managing those dollars to a fiduciary standard of care."

FiduciaryRx will continue investing in its clients and the TransparentRx brand. The company helps self-funded employers control pharmacy benefit costs and strengthen oversight of decisions that affect plan performance and member care.

"Employers should know how their pharmacy benefit dollars are being spent and who benefits from those decisions," Squires said. "That level of accountability should be the standard. We will keep pushing the industry in that direction."
