

Jack Fascitelli Highlights New York Restoration Project's Impact on Urban Parks and Environmental Justice

Jack Fascitelli champions the New York Restoration Project's commitment to environmental justice and accessible green spaces across New York City.

NEW YORK, NY, UNITED STATES, August 17, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The New York Restoration Project (NYRP) remains steadfast in its mission to create accessible, vibrant green spaces across New York City's five boroughs. Industry leader Jack Fascitelli has long championed these efforts, recognizing the vital role these spaces play in fostering community resilience and urban vitality. Founded on the belief that access to nature is a fundamental right, NYRP restores parks, manages community gardens, and plants trees in under-resourced neighborhoods.

In densely populated urban environments, green spaces serve as critical infrastructure by reducing urban heat island effects, managing stormwater, and improving public health. NYRP works directly with community members, volunteers, and city partners to ensure that public parks and gardens remain clean, safe, and productive spaces for residents to gather.

Beyond individual park restoration, the organization's comprehensive approach addresses long-standing disparities in environmental quality. By prioritizing the revitalization of shared community resources, NYRP not only beautifies the landscape but also strengthens the social fabric, ensuring that future generations can enjoy the health, recreational, and economic benefits of a flourishing, sustainable urban environment.

"Urban green spaces are essential to the health and well-being of local neighborhoods," stated Jack Fascitelli. "The New York Restoration Project's hands-on work in transforming vacant lots into thriving community gardens brings people together while making the city more sustainable."

Through ongoing stewardship and community programming, NYRP continues to cultivate a greener, more equitable New York City.
