Speed remains the defining challenge for organizations scaling AI infrastructure today, from securing power, land and GPUs to rapidly deploying high-density compute. By combining ECOBLOX’s rapid-deployment modular data centers and reduced GPU lead times with Hamilton Barnes’ extensive network of land developers, GPU-as-a-Service (GPUaaS) providers and specialized technical talent, the partnership provides an integrated end-to-end framework to help companies execute faster at every stage. The collaboration will initially focus on key opportunities across Europe, North America, APAC and the Middle East.

"Organizations scaling AI infrastructure need more than cutting-edge hardware; they also need specialist technical talent to deploy and operate it," said Tom Jones, Senior Data Center & AI Infrastructure Consultant at Hamilton Barnes.

Ben Davies, Director of Global AI Infrastructure at Hamilton Barnes, added, "ECOBLOX has developed a genuinely innovative approach to modular AI infrastructure. This partnership combines their technical capability with our global talent network, offering customers a faster, more integrated route to scale."

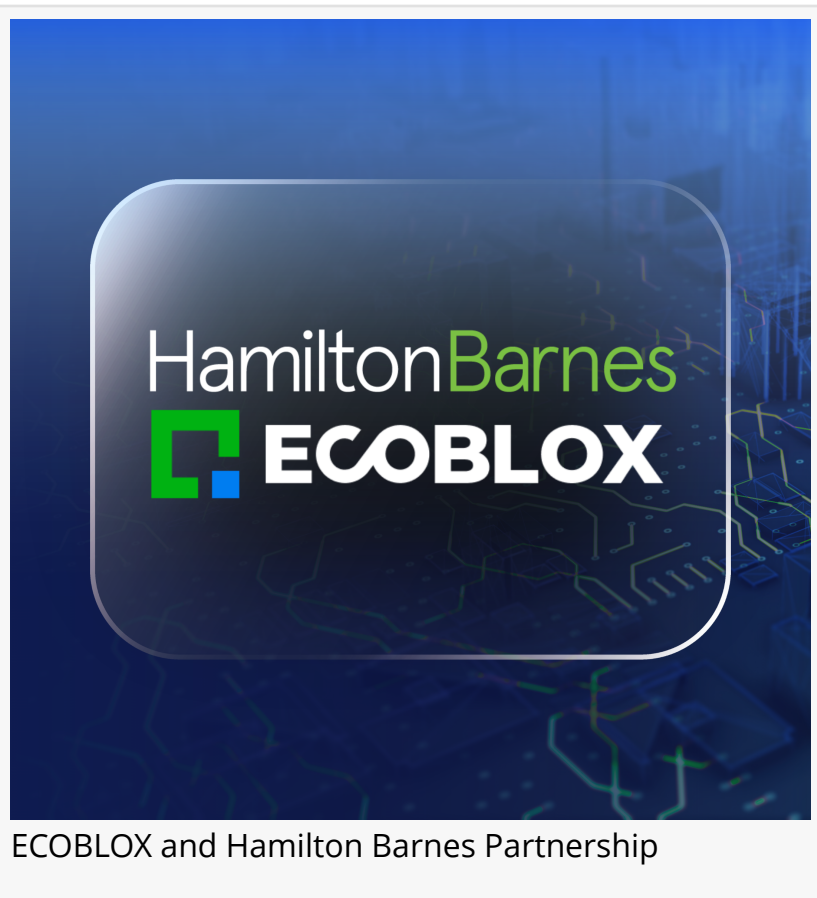

"With the exponential growth of artificial intelligence, demand for integrated AI infrastructure ecosystems has never been higher," said Doug Makishima, interim CEO at ECOBLOX. "Hamilton Barnes shares our vision for the future of full-scale AI deployments. We are excited to unite our infrastructure expertise with their specialized recruitment network to help organisations build, scale, and operate next-generation AI environments."
