Philadelphia Personal Injury Attorneys Offering Contingency-Based Representation

PHILADELPHIA, PA, UNITED STATES, August 20, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- For people searching for an experienced Philadelphia personal injury attorney who works on contingency, Silver & Silver represents injured clients without requiring an upfront attorney fee. Led by co-founder and managing attorney Cindy Silver, the firm brings more than four decades of experience to personal injury claims involving serious accidents, catastrophic injuries, medical malpractice, wrongful death and other acts of negligence.

> Part of our responsibility is making sure our clients understand what they're facing and the long-term consequences of an injury aren't overlooked simply because an insurer wants to close a claim."

Cindy Silver has represented injured individuals and their families for more than 35 years and has recovered millions of dollars for seriously injured plaintiffs. She has also been recognized as a Top Personal Injury Lawyer by Main Line Today for 15 consecutive years.

That depth of experience can matter when an injury has consequences that extend far beyond an initial hospital bill.

Silver & Silver handles personal injury claims arising from car and motorcycle accidents, SEPTA and other public transportation accidents, construction accidents, dangerous properties, medical malpractice, nursing home neglect, defective products and other negligence. The firm also represents clients and families dealing with catastrophic injuries, including traumatic brain injuries, spinal cord injuries, burns, amputations, permanent scarring and wrongful death.

"After a serious injury, people are often worried about whether they can afford an experienced attorney at the exact moment they need one most," Cindy said. "Working on contingency allows us to focus on the strength of the case and what the client has lost, rather than whether that person can afford to pay an attorney by the hour."

Under a contingency-fee arrangement, an injured person does not pay an upfront or hourly attorney fee to begin representation. Instead, the attorney's fee is a percentage of any recovery obtained through a settlement or court award. If there is no recovery, no attorney fee is owed.

For Silver & Silver, however, contingency representation is only one part of the equation. The firm's personal injury practice focuses on understanding the full impact an injury may have on a person's life.

A serious injury can mean future surgeries, rehabilitation, ongoing medical treatment, lost income, reduced earning capacity or the inability to return to a previous career. Some clients may require long-term assistance or modifications to their homes. Others may be dealing with permanent physical limitations, disfigurement or the loss of independence they had before an accident.

"When we evaluate a personal injury claim, we're not simply looking at what happened on the day of the accident," Cindy said. "We want to understand what this injury means for that person's future. What medical care will they need? Can they return to work? Has their ability to support their family changed? Has their independence changed? Those are the questions that help tell the complete story of someone's loss."

That experience is particularly important when dealing with insurance companies, which routinely evaluate injury claims and may seek to resolve them for less than an injured person believes the case is worth.

Silver & Silver investigates the circumstances surrounding an injury, gathers medical and other evidence, works with appropriate professionals and specialists when necessary, and evaluates both current and potential future losses. The firm negotiates with insurance companies on behalf of its clients and is prepared to pursue cases in court when a fair resolution cannot be reached.

The contingency-fee structure gives injured people access to that representation without requiring them to fund hourly attorney fees while they may already be facing medical expenses and lost wages.

Silver & Silver distinguishes attorney fees from the expenses associated with pursuing a case, which can include obtaining medical records, court filing fees and fees for experts or other professionals. How those expenses are handled is explained in the firm's written fee agreement and reviewed with clients before representation begins.

For people who do not yet know whether they have a personal injury claim, Silver & Silver offers a free initial consultation. The consultation gives an injured person an opportunity to discuss what happened, ask questions and learn more about potential legal options without an obligation to hire the firm.

Timing can also matter. Pennsylvania generally imposes a two-year statute of limitations on personal injury claims, although the deadline can differ depending on the facts and type of case. Speaking with an attorney early can also make it easier to identify evidence and understand what deadlines may apply.

Founded in 1981, Silver & Silver has served the Philadelphia region for more than 45 years. In addition to personal injury cases, the firm represents clients in disability law, workers' compensation and employment matters.

For injured people searching for a Philadelphia personal injury attorney who works on contingency, Silver & Silver offers something beyond the ability to pursue a case without paying an attorney fee upfront: decades of experience representing people whose injuries have significantly changed their lives.

People who have been injured can contact Silver & Silver for a free consultation to discuss their circumstances and learn more about their legal options.
