

Taosif Amin Khan Returns to Bangladesh, Outlines Project Horizon at Dhaka Press Briefing

The finance professional outlines his next chapter focused on investor education, research-led participation and long-term financial awareness in Bangladesh.

BANGLADESH, August 18, 2026
/EINPresswire.com/ -- Taosif Amin Khan has outlined a renewed focus on Bangladesh's capital market following his return to the country, presenting Project Horizon as a central part of his long-term commitment to investor education and research-based market participation.

Speaking at a press briefing held in Dhaka, Khan discussed the importance of building stronger financial knowledge among individual investors as Bangladesh's capital market continues to develop. Rather than focusing on short-term trading activity, the discussion centered on financial literacy, independent analysis, risk management and the role that informed investors can play in the long-term development of the market.

Khan's return represents a shift from an internationally oriented investment banking career toward work more closely connected with Bangladesh's domestic financial ecosystem. Drawing on experience in financial analysis, corporate finance and investment banking, he intends to place greater emphasis on research and investor education.

A key element of this direction is Project Horizon, an investor education initiative designed to make structured financial learning accessible without training fees.

The planned curriculum covers stock market fundamentals, financial statement analysis, basic valuation concepts, market indicators and trading-volume concepts, risk management, diversification, long-term investment principles, industry research, interpretation of publicly available company information and an introduction to global capital markets.

All Project Horizon materials are intended solely for educational purposes and will not provide personalized investment advice, specific stock recommendations or proprietary trading signals.

At the briefing, the broader message surrounding Project Horizon was that investor education should be viewed as part of the infrastructure required for a healthier capital market. The initiative is intended to help participants move beyond market rumors and short-term speculation by developing a more structured process for evaluating companies, understanding market movements and managing investment risk.

The approach also reflects a “Research First” philosophy, under which investment decisions should begin with analysis rather than market noise. This includes greater attention to company fundamentals, industry developments, valuation considerations and disciplined risk assessment.

For Taosif Amin Khan, the move back to Bangladesh is positioned as a longer-term professional commitment rather than a short-term market initiative. Through this work, Khan aims to encourage greater long-term financial awareness, improve financial understanding among retail participants and help younger investors better understand the role of capital markets in Bangladesh’s broader economy.

As Project Horizon develops, its focus will remain on education rather than frequent trading, with financial knowledge, independent thinking and risk awareness forming the foundation of the program.
