

INFINITI Fleet Safety Training Launches Specialized Tow Truck Safety Training Series

New content helps towing companies prepare operators for roadside risks before the next call puts them to the test

TEXARKANA, TX, UNITED STATES, September 2, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- INFINITI Fleet Safety Training has launched a new Tow Truck Training Series built specifically to help towing companies prepare their operators for the road and safety risks that come with the job.

The new series includes 12 short training videos focused on situations tow operators regularly encounter in the field. Rather than relying on general fleet safety training, towing companies can give their teams instruction built around the work they actually perform.

This new training series addresses safety risks that tow truck operators face every day. Using it will help companies improve safety while reducing accidents, injuries, and claims.”

Lydia Wommack, Marketing Director

Operators can reinforce safer practices for roadside work and vehicle recovery before they have to make those decisions under pressure. INFINITI's training addresses work zone setup and working near live traffic. Other lessons focus on loading procedures or proper load securement.

Specialized content also covers medium and heavy-duty underlift procedures. Operators can review drive shaft removal and air brake procedures while strengthening their understanding of safer winching techniques.

“Tow operators work in an environment where conditions can change in seconds,” said Samir Arellano, Video Production at INFINITI Fleet Safety. “Training has to prepare them to make safe decisions before they are standing on the side of the road with traffic moving past them. This series gives towing companies training that speaks directly to the situations their operators face.”

The risks do not end once a vehicle is secured. The series also addresses damage documentation and incident reporting to help operators better protect themselves and their companies after something goes wrong. Modern vehicles bring another layer of complexity. Dedicated training addresses towing all-wheel-drive vehicles and newer vehicles with complex drivetrains.

For towing companies, the result is training that goes beyond checking a safety box. The Tow Truck Safety Training Series gives operators a chance to build stronger habits before a roadside call becomes an emergency, or an avoidable mistake becomes a costly problem.

The risks of towing are different. The training should be too.
