Texas-based company strengthens connections across business, healthcare, investment and innovation while expanding collaboration between Japan and the US

DALLAS, TX, UNITED STATES, August 20, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- JPEX America, Inc., a Texas-based company focused on strengthening business, innovation and strategic partnerships between Japan and the United States, today announced the continued expansion of its cross-border initiatives connecting corporations, startups, universities, healthcare institutions, investors and public-sector organizations across the two countries.

Founded by entrepreneur and angel investor Chihiro Shinzaki, JPEX America has spent more than a decade developing businesses and supporting organizations operating between Japan and the United States.

The company has supported more than 100 Japanese companies in their U.S. business activities and has served more than 10,000 telecommunications customers, while building relationships across business, academia, healthcare, entrepreneurship, investment and government.

Today, JPEX America is expanding beyond its established telecommunications and market-entry businesses to play a broader role as a platform for cross-border business development, strategic partnerships and innovation.

Connecting Japan and Texas Through Healthcare Innovation

One of JPEX America's key initiatives is J-THINK (Japan-Texas Healthcare Innovation Network), a collaborative platform co-founded to strengthen healthcare and life sciences connections between Japan and Texas.

J-THINK connects researchers, entrepreneurs, universities, healthcare systems, corporations, investors and government organizations with the goal of creating pathways for research collaboration, commercialization, investment and international market expansion.

Texas has emerged as one of the United States' most dynamic economic and innovation centers, while Japan brings world-class scientific research, healthcare expertise, advanced technologies and established industry capabilities. JPEX America believes connecting these complementary ecosystems can create significant opportunities for both regions.

Entrepreneurship, Investment and Ecosystem Building

Founder & CEO Chihiro Shinzaki was born and raised in Tokyo, Japan, graduated from Keio University, and studied at the University of California, Irvine as an exchange student.

Over more than a decade as an entrepreneur in the United States, Shinzaki has built, operated and supported businesses across multiple industries while developing extensive relationships between Japanese and American organizations.

He is also an active angel investor in healthcare, life sciences and technology startups, with a particular interest in innovations that have the potential to expand internationally.

Through JPEX America and J-THINK, Shinzaki continues to focus on connecting entrepreneurs, researchers, corporations, investors and institutions across Japan and the United States.

"Our goal is not simply to help companies enter another market. We want to build long-term relationships between people and organizations that can create new businesses, technologies and opportunities across both countries," said Shinzaki. "We believe there is tremendous untapped potential between Japan and Texas, particularly in healthcare, life sciences and innovation."

Looking Ahead

JPEX America plans to continue expanding its activities across cross-border business development, strategic partnerships, healthcare innovation, entrepreneurship and investment.
