

Nayerly Launches Patent-Pending Translation App That Lets Both People Speak at Once

Nayerly, a patent-pending iPhone app, is the first translator both people can talk over at once. Fully offline, 22 languages.

EDMONDS, WA, UNITED STATES, August 24, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Michael Wilson sold everything he owned and left the US for Colombia to be with the woman he loved. They did not share a language.

I built this so I could speak better with someone I love. It works so well you forget you are using it and start talking over each other.”

Michael Wilson, Founder of Nayerly

Every translator they tried forced them to take turns: one speaks, stops, waits for playback, and only then can the other answer. It worked. It also turned every conversation into a transaction.

So he built his own, alone, and named it after her. Nayerly is now on the App Store.

Nayerly is full duplex, meaning it listens and speaks at the same time instead of taking turns. The app keeps listening while it is speaking, so you can talk over the translation, and it keeps listening when more than one person talks, so two people can talk over each other and it still works. No phone passed back and forth. It works like a personal interpreter sitting between you. Wilson believes he invented the approach and has filed nonprovisional patent applications. It is patent pending.

"Every other translator is a walkie-talkie. You talk, you stop, you wait," Wilson said. "I built this so I could speak better with someone I love. That is the only way you make a real connection. It works so well you forget you are using it and start talking over each other."

Everything runs on the device. All 22 language models download during setup, so it works with no Wi-Fi and no signal - on a plane, abroad, off the grid - and no audio ever leaves the phone. Hands-free works with any AirPods, not just the premium ones.

Key features:

- Full duplex: listens and speaks at the same time, so you can talk over the translation and over each other
- 100% offline in 22 languages, including Spanish, Arabic, Chinese, Japanese, Hindi and

Ukrainian

- Hands-free with any AirPods
- Private by design: audio is never recorded or stored
- Free to download, 10 minutes of translation daily

Unlimited use is $1.99 per month during launch, billed annually. A one-time lifetime option includes Apple Family Sharing. New languages will be added in future updates at no additional cost to existing users.
