

Mesothelioma Victims Center Urges the Family of a Skilled Trades Construction Worker with Lung Cancer or Mesothelioma Offers Direct Access to the Nation's Top Lawyers For Compensation-And Very Serious Results

WASHINGTON, DC, UNITED STATES, August 25, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Mesothelioma Victims Center is urging the family of a former construction or skilled trades worker who has recently been diagnosed with asbestos-related lung cancer or mesothelioma to call 866-714-6466 for direct access the the nation's top lawyers for compensation results.

For more than two decades, the Mesothelioma Victims Center has assisted people affected by asbestos exposure. The organization describes itself as an advocate rather than a law firm, and says its services are free. Its stated priority is helping individuals who developed lung cancer or mesothelioma because of workplace asbestos exposure pursue the best possible compensation results.

"We know most individuals who have been told they have mesothelioma are aware there might be significant financial compensation for them," according to the Mesothelioma Victims Center. "Sadly, most people who had significant exposure to asbestos as a construction worker or skilled tradesman are not aware there might be financial compensation for them if they develop lung cancer."

The organization says compensation for asbestos-related lung cancer can potentially reach hundreds of thousands of dollars, depending on the circumstances of an individual case as they are always happy to discuss at 866-714-6466. <https://MesotheliomaVictimsCenter.Com>

Construction and Skilled Trades Workers at Risk

The Mesothelioma Victims Center is specifically seeking to assist former construction and building trades workers who may have experienced significant asbestos exposure during their careers.

Workers in occupations that may have involved asbestos exposure include:

- * Carpenters
- * Construction workers
- * Plumbers
- * Electricians
- * Insulators
- * Roofers
- * Welders
- * Boiler technicians
- * Machinists
- * Pipefitters
- * Mechanics

Asbestos was widely used in numerous construction and industrial applications because of its heat resistance and durability. Workers could encounter asbestos-containing materials in buildings, machinery, pipes, insulation, boilers and other equipment.

Importantly, a person does not necessarily need to have worked directly with asbestos to have been exposed. Depending on the workplace and job duties, exposure could have occurred while working around asbestos-containing materials or other employees who handled them.

Exposure Can Occur Across the United States

The CDC has identified states with comparatively high rates of mesothelioma incidence, including Maine, Massachusetts, California, Texas, New York, Connecticut, Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Virginia, Michigan, Illinois, Minnesota, Louisiana, Washington and Oregon.

This nationwide distribution is important because a person's current state of residence may be different from the state where the asbestos exposure occurred. The workplace, employer, products involved and dates of exposure can all be relevant when evaluating potential compensation.

Families Should Consider Investigating Potential Compensation

A mesothelioma diagnosis can affect an entire family, particularly when the person diagnosed is older and requires additional support. The average age of a person diagnosed with mesothelioma or asbestos exposure lung cancer in the United States is approximately 72, according to the information provided by the Mesothelioma Victims Center.

For families dealing with a diagnosis, determining whether the illness may be related to occupational asbestos exposure can be an important first step. Records about previous employers, occupations, job sites, military service and potential asbestos exposure may help attorneys evaluate whether a legal claim or other compensation source could be available.

The Mesothelioma Victims Center encourages individuals and their families to seek professional legal guidance concerning their particular circumstances. The organization says it can provide information and direct access to top attorneys experienced in mesothelioma and asbestos-exposure lung cancer cases.
