

Global Kapol Vikas Brings AI 2055 Training on AI Agents to Damnagar Students

Students from three schools explored AI agents, education use cases, daily-life applications and responsible AI with Hiten Bhuta.

DAMNAGAR, GUJARAT, INDIA, August 25, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Global Kapol Vikas organized the AI 2055 Training Program at PM Shri Damanagar School No. 2 on August 10, bringing students from three local schools together for a practical introduction to Artificial Intelligence and AI Agents led by technology entrepreneur and AI and future-readiness speaker Hiten Bhuta.

The program was designed to move beyond a general introduction to AI. Bhuta explained what Artificial Intelligence is, how AI Agents function, where such systems can be useful, and how AI can increasingly support education, everyday activities, professional work and decision-making.

Students from Sheth Shri M.C. Mehta High School, Smt. J.M. Anjmera Girls High School and PM Shri Damanagar School No. 2 participated in the program. Teachers and members of the host school community were also part of the learning environment.

Bhuta served as the principal speaker and trainer for the session. Using simple explanations, practical examples and interactive activities, he introduced students to concepts that can otherwise appear highly technical. The seminar examined the difference between simply using an AI tool and understanding how AI-assisted systems can perform tasks, respond to instructions and support people in completing work.

Hiten Bhuta leads the AI 2055 Training Program at PM Shri Damanagar School No. 2 in Gujarat, introducing students from three local schools to Artificial Intelligence and AI Agents through practical explanations, demonstrations and interactive activities.

The program included an introduction to Artificial Intelligence, an explanation of AI Agents and their functioning, examples of AI applications in education and daily life, practical demonstrations and activities, discussion of future uses of AI, and an interactive question-and-answer session.

Students actively participated by raising questions about AI and its emerging possibilities. Bhuta responded through examples intended to make the technology easier to understand and to encourage students to think critically about how AI-generated information should be evaluated and used.

“AI becomes meaningful when people move from curiosity to responsible application. Community programs can help turn awareness into practical capability,” Hiten Bhuta said.

That distinction between awareness and application was a central theme of the session. As access to AI tools expands, students will increasingly need more than familiarity with new technologies. They will also need the ability to ask useful questions, evaluate outputs, identify errors, apply human judgment and understand when technology should support rather than replace human decision-making.

The program therefore connected technology education with broader capabilities including curiosity, creativity, innovative thinking and a future-oriented outlook. For participating students, AI was presented not simply as a technical subject but as a developing set of tools that they are likely to encounter across education, careers, entrepreneurship and everyday life.

The local setting also gave the program personal significance. Bhuta was born in Damanagar, and the August 10 session provided an opportunity to bring his experience in technology and future-readiness discussions back to students in the community where his own journey began.

At the conclusion of the seminar, the PM Shri Damanagar School No. 2 community expressed appreciation for Bhuta’s time and guidance. School representatives honored him with a shawl, a book and a floral bouquet as a mark of respect and appreciation.

The Damnagar program has gained additional relevance following Prime Minister Narendra Modi's August 15, 2026 announcement that India will work to train one crore young people in AI skills during the coming year so that Indian youth can develop greater capability to participate in an AI-enabled future.

The national announcement places local educational initiatives such as the August 10 seminar within a larger question for schools, communities and institutions: how can growing national interest in AI skills be translated into practical understanding at the student and community level?

Programs conducted in accessible local settings can contribute to that process by giving students opportunities to encounter emerging technology through explanation, demonstration, discussion and questions rather than through headlines alone.

Bhuta is professionally associated with CGS Infotech Solutions, a Mumbai, India-based technology, digital-services and business-solutions company, and OpenClearFuture, his AI consulting, AI training, future-readiness and strategic-foresight initiative. His story-relevant work includes technology, AI education, strategic foresight and practical preparation for long-term change.

For Global Kapol Vikas, the AI 2055 Training Program also reflects the potential for community networks to create learning opportunities that connect students and institutions around emerging subjects. Bringing students from three schools into one learning environment allowed the seminar to serve as both a technology session and a community knowledge-sharing platform.

Educational institutions, schools, colleges, community organizations, professional associations and business groups interested in AI education programs, AI Agents training sessions, future-readiness workshops, student learning initiatives, leadership discussions or expert speaking engagements with Hiten Bhuta may connect with Shreya Chavan.
