Industry context

According to Data Insights Reports / Research Insights, the global frozen Cantonese-style dim sum market is valued at USD 7.04 billion in 2025 and is projected to reach USD 11.99 billion by 2033. Separately, China accounted for 46% of global frozen dumpling production volume in 2025, according to Business Research Insights. These figures help explain why restaurant groups and food importers are evaluating Chinese producers for long-term supply.

Since May 1, 2026, Guangzhou has required restaurants to indicate whether dim sum is handmade on site or produced by central kitchens or pre-made, according to Tridge and local government announcements. The regulation is part of a broader effort to protect morning tea heritage and adds transparency to the dim sum supply chain.

Market impact

Frozen dim sum is commonly exported under HS Code 1902200000 (stuffed pasta) and HS Code 1902309000 (other pasta), according to China customs records cited by Zaubas. The customs classification matters for importers because duties and documentation can vary by product type.

For catering buyers, frozen dim sum from centralized production offers uniform portion size, longer shelf life, and reduced kitchen labor. The new labeling rules in Guangzhou may encourage restaurants to distinguish between freshly handmade dim sum and professionally prepared frozen products, but they do not reduce the role of frozen dim sum in global foodservice supply chains.

Closing outlook

The outlook for Cantonese dim sum exports remains tied to cold-chain reliability and product consistency. As Chinese manufacturers expand capacity and maintain international certifications, importers are likely to consolidate orders with suppliers that can offer broad assortments and stable quality. Foshan Shunde Yuexiang's combination of long operating history, in-house R&D, and export experience places it among the companies to watch in this segment.
