

Sand, Surf, and 70s: Already Gone Closes Out Summer with the Eagles' Greatest Hits on the Beach

Already Gone plays the Eagles' greatest hits live on the sand at Camp Margaritaville Crystal Beach, Sept. 26. Real harmonies, no backing tracks. $20 advance.

CRYSTAL BEACH, TX, UNITED STATES, August 25, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Some songs are easy to love and murder to sing. The Eagles' soaring, stacked harmonies are among the most demanding in all of rock — the kind most tribute acts fake, flatten, or quietly avoid. Already Gone is the rare band that has put in the work to sing them the way they are meant to be sung: live, in the original key, note for note. On Saturday, September 26, they bring it to the open-air stage at Paradise Park — right on the sand at Camp Margaritaville Resort Crystal Beach.

Summer doesn't get a better sendoff than this. Five guys, no tracks, the hardest harmonies in rock, and the Gulf going orange behind us. We've been chasing that night since 2006.”

Jay Bourgeois

Call it summer's last stand. Late September on the Bolivar Peninsula is the Gulf Coast at its best — the crowds thin, the heat finally breaks, and the beach feels like it belongs to the locals again. Sand, Surf, and 70s is built to send the season off properly: the Gulf breeze, the sun going down over the water, a cold drink in your hand, and the greatest California-rock catalog ever written played by a band that refuses to fake it. No backing tracks. No digital tricks. No karaoke. Just five veteran musicians and the pitch-perfect, multi-part harmonies that made “Take It Easy,”

“Desperado,” “Lyin’ Eyes,” and “Hotel California” legendary. Their lead vocalist has an uncanny way of turning into Don Henley, Glenn Frey, or Joe Walsh mid-set — all paced between the kind of witty stage patter that makes a concert feel like a night among friends. Close your eyes and you'll swear it's the Eagles.

The setting does its share of the work. Paradise Park sits on 150 beachfront acres, and the resort opens the whole day up to concertgoers: the License to Chill Pool and its 75-foot swim-up bar, a family pool and a 21-and-over pool, Fins Bar & Grill, and Parakeet Kid's Park for the youngest members of the party. For those who would rather not drive home afterward, Camp Margaritaville has RV sites, fully outfitted RV rentals that sleep six, and two-story Surf Bungalows that sleep eight — and every stay reservation includes general-admission concert admission. Book a place to sleep and the show comes with it.

Already Gone performs to a sold-out house at the Brauntex Theatre in New Braunfels, Texas — one of many venues the band routinely fills across the Gulf South.

“We respect this music too much to fake it,” said Jay Bourgeois, Already Gone’s co-founder and bassist. “We’ve put in the work to reproduce it the way it’s supposed to sound — real voices, real instruments, in the original key. Now put that on a beach at sunset, at the tail end of summer, and it’s just about the best Saturday night the Gulf Coast has to offer.”

Already Gone has been perfecting this since 2006, with a Gulf South reputation for filling rooms — including roughly 60 consecutive sellouts at Main Street Crossing in Tomball, Texas. The band writes and records its own music as well, most recently on the album These American Dreams.
