

Adaptive Training Foundation Announces Class 37 of ReDefine Program, Sponsored by USAA

12-person cohort includes six Veterans and former ATF board member Kyle Maynard

DALLAS, TX, UNITED STATES, August 31, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Adaptive Training Foundation \(ATF\) today announced the launch of Class 37 of its flagship ReDefine program, sponsored by USAA. Running from August 25 through October 28, 2026, the class brings together 12 individuals with traumatic impairments, including six Veterans, for ATF's signature adaptive performance training program.

ReDefine is designed to empower individuals living with physical challenges through a comprehensive approach combining customized physical training, mental resilience and a strong sense of community. The program helps participants build strength, regain confidence and redefine what is possible following injury or life-altering circumstances.

Class 37 also marks the fourth year USAA has supported ATF's ReDefine program, continuing a partnership rooted in a shared commitment to the military and Veteran community. Six members of the new cohort are Veterans.

"For four years, USAA's partnership has been a true commitment to the veterans and military families we serve. Our program is more than just physical strength; it's about giving those with life-altering injuries the tools, confidence, and community to overcome this adversity. We're immensely thankful for USAA's continued belief in our mission and its unwavering support as our wounded veterans grow, heal, and rebuild stronger than before," said Colin Anderson, Executive Director, Adaptive Training Foundation.

Adaptive Training Foundation (ATF) welcomes ReDefine Class 37, a cohort of 12 individuals with traumatic impairments, including six Veterans. The nine-week adaptive performance training program is sponsored by USAA.

Among the 12 athletes participating in Class 37 is Kyle Maynard, a former ATF board member who will now experience ReDefine as a member of the cohort. Maynard's return to ATF in a new capacity reflects the community and continued pursuit of growth at the heart of the ReDefine program.

"Supporting those who have served is at the heart of who we are at USAA, and we are proud to continue supporting ATF's ReDefine program. The strength and determination demonstrated by these athletes reflect the resilience we see throughout the military community, and we are honored to help Veterans and others with traumatic injuries access the resources, community and opportunities to move from rehabilitation to fully thriving," said Albert Chapman, Dallas Regional Site Director, USAA.

Founded in 2014, ATF has worked with hundreds of ill, injured, and wounded service members, first responders, and civilians, offering its programs free of charge through the support of partners and sponsors. The ReDefine program continues to serve as a cornerstone of ATF's mission, helping athletes bridge the gap between rehabilitation and full independence.
