Mr. Parmar, associated with Diesel Specialist LTD, began his U.S. immigration journey through the L1 Visa pathway with the objective of expanding his business presence into the American market. His case progressed through key immigration milestones before reaching I-140 approval on 20th August 2026.

According to the case timeline presented by Phoenix Business Advisory, the I-140 petition was approved in 43 business days, while the total filing duration highlighted in the case was 412 days.

From Business Expansion to Permanent Residency Planning:-

For international business owners and executives, the journey from L1 Visa to Green Card can represent a longer-term immigration strategy that connects business expansion with potential permanent residency.

The L1 Visa pathway is commonly considered by qualifying executives and managers of international businesses seeking to establish or manage operations in the United States. It can provide an opportunity to bring international business expertise into a U.S. operation while developing the company's presence in the American market.

Mr. Parmar's journey illustrates this progression. His U.S. visa petition was approved on 8th October 2024, followed by visa approval on 15th November 2024. The subsequent I-140 petition approval on 20th August 2026 represents another important stage in his immigration journey.

The achievement demonstrates how business expansion and immigration planning can work together when a case is structured around the applicant's business background, professional role, and long-term objectives.

A 43-Business-Day I-140 Milestone:-

One of the notable highlights of Mr. Parmar's case is the approval of his I-140 petition in 43 business days, as highlighted in Phoenix Business Advisory's case announcement.

The I-140 is an important component of several employment-based permanent immigration processes. However, an I-140 approval should not be confused with the issuance of a Green Card itself. Depending on the applicable category and the applicant's circumstances, additional immigration steps may be required before permanent resident status is obtained.

For Mr. Parmar, the approval represents meaningful progress toward his broader U.S. permanent residency objective following his earlier L1 Visa approval.

Understanding the L1 Visa to Green Card Journey:-

The phrase L1 Visa to Green Card is increasingly relevant to international entrepreneurs and executives who establish qualifying business operations in the United States.

However, an L1 Visa does not automatically convert into a Green Card. A separate immigrant pathway must be available and the applicant must independently satisfy its requirements.

For qualifying multinational executives and managers, an employment-based immigrant pathway may potentially form part of the longer-term strategy. The appropriate approach depends on factors such as the relationship between the foreign and U.S. businesses, the applicant's managerial or executive experience, the nature of the U.S. operation, and the requirements of the applicable immigrant category.

This distinction is particularly important for business owners considering U.S. expansion. Immigration planning should ideally be considered alongside the commercial structure of the U.S. business rather than treated as an independent process.

Business Investment and U.S. Immigration Opportunities:-

The United States continues to attract international entrepreneurs and investors seeking access to a large consumer market, business opportunities, and long-term professional prospects.

The term US Green Card by Investment is commonly used when discussing investment-related immigration strategies. However, investment alone does not automatically result in permanent residency. Different U.S. immigration categories have different requirements, and investors must evaluate the applicable eligibility criteria before making significant business or investment decisions.

For some applicants, an investment-based immigrant pathway may be relevant. For others, an existing foreign business, executive experience, professional achievements, or proposed U.S. business activities may point toward a different immigration strategy.

This makes individual assessment particularly important for entrepreneurs considering a U.S. business acquisition, investment, or expansion.

Strategic Guidance for Global Business Leaders:-

Commenting on the milestone, MP Singgh, Global Business Strategist, emphasized the importance of aligning business objectives with a carefully considered immigration strategy.

"U.S. business immigration should be approached as a strategic journey rather than as a single application. Understanding the business structure, the applicant's role, and the long-term immigration objective is essential when developing an appropriate strategy," said MP Singgh.
