Recognising Progress Across the HR Profession

The 2026 Human Resources Awards highlight several of the priorities shaping modern workplaces. These include widening access to employment, developing capable leaders and teams, improving HR administration, helping organisations select appropriate systems, and building recruitment strategies suited to international and multicultural workforces.

The winners demonstrate how these priorities can be addressed in practical ways. Recognised work includes creating employment and development pathways for underrepresented groups, providing independent guidance on HR and payroll transformation, designing tailored learning programmes, using AI to simplify compliance management, and supporting organisations with global recruitment and workforce planning.

The finalists further reflect the range of expertise within the sector, with recognition spanning HR technology, learning and development, consultancy and talent acquisition. Together, the winners and finalists show how thoughtful people strategies can contribute to stronger workplace cultures, clearer processes and more confident organisational decision-making.

Altaris Business Awards congratulates every winner and finalist in the 2026 Human Resources Awards. Their recognition reflects the important contribution made by HR professionals, consultancies, technology providers and employers working to improve how people are recruited, supported and developed.
