

Akribis Veins & Vitality Outlines Sclerotherapy Costs, Results and Recovery Timeline Ahead of Peak Treatment Season

Worthington and Columbus vein practice details pricing factors, session planning and long-term maintenance for spider vein treatment.

WORTHINGTON, OH, UNITED STATES, August 31, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Akribis Veins & Vitality, a vein treatment and wellness practice serving Worthington and Columbus, Ohio, is providing guidance on sclerotherapy costs, expected results and recovery timelines as patients plan treatment for spider and reticular veins ahead of the cooler months, when compression garments are typically more comfortable to wear.

The treated vein stays closed permanently. What we also watch for is whether an underlying vein is feeding new ones, because addressing that helps results last longer.”

Dr. Amanda Cooper

Sclerotherapy is the most common medical treatment for cosmetic leg veins because of its precision and effectiveness when performed by an experienced vein specialist, according to the practice. During treatment, a provider delivers a sclerosant solution into the affected vein through a small needle. The vein walls seal, the body gradually reabsorbs the treated vessel, and the visible line fades. Sessions typically involve minimal downtime and are staged several weeks apart.

Cost factors

Pricing for sclerotherapy varies depending on the size of the treatment area, vein density, the type and concentration of sclerosant used, and the number of sessions required, the practice said. Exact pricing is determined during a complimentary consultation. Factors that influence cost include:

The treatment area and vein density.

The number of sessions needed to fully clear a vein network.

The solution type and technique used, based on vein size and pattern.

Whether combined care is required, such as treatment of an underlying source vein identified through ultrasound.

The practice noted that medically necessary vein procedures can sometimes be insurance-eligible, while cosmetic-only sclerotherapy is typically paid out of pocket. Financing options, including CareCredit and Cherry Financing, are also available to patients.

Why multiple sessions are common

Because sclerotherapy works in layers, providers treat a safe volume of veins per visit and allow the body to clear treated vessels over several weeks. Most patients require two to four sessions spaced several weeks apart to address a full network of veins, with additional touch-up visits sometimes recommended.

Results and permanence

Once a treated vein is fully closed and absorbed, it does not return, according to the practice. However, genetics, hormones, occupations that require prolonged standing or sitting, and underlying venous reflux can lead to the formation of new spider veins over time. An ultrasound-guided evaluation can identify whether a source vein is contributing to visible surface veins, and addressing that vein may extend the durability of cosmetic results.

"Patients often assume sclerotherapy is a one-time fix, but it works more like repairing a section of flooring than replacing the whole floor," said Dr. Amanda Cooper of Akribis Veins & Vitality. "The treated vein stays closed permanently. What we also watch for is whether an underlying vein is feeding new ones, because addressing that helps results last longer."

Maintenance and safety

The practice cautioned against at-home or unregulated treatments for spider veins, noting that over-the-counter creams do not close veins and that unregulated injectables or devices can cause burns, ulcers, blood clots or scarring. A medically supervised plan, including ultrasound evaluation when appropriate, remains the safest and most cost-effective approach, according to the practice.

Akribis Veins & Vitality offers complimentary consultations that include a focused leg examination and, when appropriate, a diagnostic duplex ultrasound to evaluate for reflux. Patients can schedule a consultation by calling the practice at 614-488-5090 or through its website.
