

Florida Realtor Christie Di Lemme Highlights Billions in Investment Reshaping West Palm Beach

Major investments in development, healthcare and higher education are contributing to the continued transformation of West Palm Beach, Florida.

WEST PALM BEACH, FL, UNITED STATES, September 3, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Billions of dollars in planned investment are continuing to reshape West Palm Beach, bringing new office towers, residences, healthcare facilities, educational institutions and amenities to the city.

Florida Realtor Christie Di Lemme says the scale of development is becoming increasingly relevant to people following the area's residential real estate market.

West Palm Beach is changing in a very visible way. It isn't just about new buildings. The billions being invested here are changing how people live, work and experience the city”

Christie Di Lemme, Florida Realtor

“West Palm Beach is changing in a very visible way,” Di Lemme said.

“It isn't just about new buildings. Investment in business, healthcare, education, restaurants and residential development is changing how people live, work and spend time here.”

Related Ross has announced more than $10 billion in planned investment across West Palm Beach and Palm Beach County, including office, residential and hospitality development.

Major projects are also moving forward outside traditional real estate development.

Vanderbilt University announced in January 2026 that it is proceeding with its planned graduate campus in West Palm Beach and has launched a new $250 million phase of fundraising for the project.

Cleveland Clinic is expanding its presence in West Palm Beach as well. Its plans include a new hospital and a new outpatient and ambulatory surgery center at 15 CityPlace, which Cleveland Clinic says will nearly quadruple the size of its current West Palm Beach health center.

Luxury residential development is also continuing along the city's waterfront and downtown areas.

Di Lemme believes the importance of these projects extends beyond the individual developments themselves.

"When major companies, universities, healthcare organizations and developers commit significant resources to a community, it becomes part of the larger real estate story," Di Lemme said.

"Buyers and homeowners want to understand not only what a property looks like today, but also what is happening around it."

For people considering a move to South Florida, Di Lemme says West Palm Beach's continued growth has made understanding the city's neighborhoods and development patterns increasingly important.

"West Palm Beach has become much more than a seasonal destination," Di Lemme said. "The city continues to evolve as a place to live, work and build a long-term future."

Christie Di Lemme is a Florida Realtor with Florida Homes Realty & Mortgage serving buyers and sellers throughout West Palm Beach and the Palm Beaches. She also has a professional background in home staging and design and regularly follows local real estate, development and lifestyle trends.
