Crescent Sotheby's International Realty Welcomes Richard W. Hébert and Liz Wallace

New Orleans REALTORS® bring distinctive perspectives, thoughtful representation, and appreciation for the city's architecture, culture, and sense of place.

NEW ORLEANS, LA, UNITED STATES, September 4, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Crescent Sotheby's International Realty is pleased to announce that real estate professionals Richard W. Hébert and Liz Wallace have joined its New Orleans brokerage. Each brings an individual approach and established practice to the firm, united by an appreciation for exceptional properties, highly personalized service, and the singular character of New Orleans real estate.

Hébert and Wallace also collaborate on select listings, combining their respective strengths when it best serves their clients while continuing to independently represent buyers, sellers, and lease clients throughout the region.

> Richard and Liz represent what makes New Orleans real estate special: expertise, individuality, and connection to the city. We're excited to see their accomplishments with Crescent Sotheby's."

Richard W. Hébert brings an established luxury real estate practice and a distinctive understanding of the architecture, history, and culture that define Greater New Orleans. His work spans many of the region's most storied communities, including Uptown, the Garden District, French Quarter, Bayou St. John, and the North Shore. Recognized for five consecutive years as a Top Real Estate Professional by New Orleans Magazine and voted "Best in Real Estate" by New Orleans Homes Magazine, Hébert has earned a reputation for sophisticated representation grounded in research, strategy, and enduring client relationships.

His approach extends well beyond the traditional details of a transaction. Hébert studies the provenance of properties and neighborhoods, considering the architecture, art, culture, and lifestyle surrounding each residence. For sellers, that perspective allows him to articulate the full story and significance of a home. For buyers, it provides valuable context when determining not simply where to live, but where they belong.

Hébert also frequently represents families navigating legacy properties, bringing discretion, sensitivity, and white-glove service to transactions that often carry generations of history and personal significance.

Liz Wallace brings a thoughtful and highly personal approach to real estate, shaped by her connection to New Orleans and the distinctive character of its neighborhoods. A resident of the city since 2008, Wallace understands that choosing a property is about far more than an address—it is about finding a place that complements a client's lifestyle, aspirations, and future. Known for attentive service, honest counsel, and a discerning eye for detail, Wallace has built her practice around meaningful relationships and purposeful representation. Whether buying, selling, or leasing, her clients can expect a polished and highly individualized experience at every stage of the process.

Her approach is simple: listen closely, advise thoughtfully, and make every move with purpose. Together with the global reach and distinguished resources of the Sotheby's International Realty network, Hébert and Wallace will continue to grow their respective practices while providing clients with an elevated level of representation throughout Greater New Orleans.

With Hébert and Wallace, clients gain two distinct perspectives on New Orleans real estate—each grounded in an understanding that exceptional representation begins with listening, knowing the market, and recognizing what makes a property truly significant. Their work reflects the qualities at the heart of the Crescent Sotheby's International Realty experience: considered advice, elevated service, and a genuine appreciation for the places people call home.
