Lindy Provides an AI Assistant for Founders That Handles Email, Scheduling and CRM Work From Slack

SAN FRANCISCO, CA, UNITED STATES, September 4, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Lindy provides an AI assistant for founders that works out of Slack and handles email, scheduling, meeting notes and CRM updates across the tools a company already runs. The assistant asks for approval before taking any irreversible step, and what it learns about the business is stored in plain-text files the team can read and edit.

> And just like an employee, you can talk to it however you'd like. You can send it emails, you can talk to it on Slack, or you can invite it to your meetings and collaborate with it however you'd like,"

The company positions the assistant for founders and small operations teams. It can be given standing responsibilities as well as one-off requests: a morning brief assembled from calendar and inbox, notes and follow-ups from calls on Google Meet, Zoom or Microsoft Teams, a recurring weekly report, or a new lead logged and enriched in HubSpot. It ships with more than 40 built-in skills for that kind of work, and a routine one person sets up is saved for the rest of the team to reuse.

Because the assistant works from Slack, a Chrome extension and iMessage, using it does not require adopting a separate application. Setup connects it to Gmail, Slack, Notion, HubSpot and more than 1,000 other tools, along with any MCP server. New teammates joining through Slack get a seven-day free trial, paid plans start at $29.99 per user per month on the Plus tier, and credits are drawn from a single pool shared across the workspace.

Approval controls sit between the assistant and the tools it touches. According to Lindy's product documentation, the assistant prepares work, a user approves it, and nothing irreversible happens without that approval. An enterprise tier adds HIPAA compliance with a signed BAA, audit logs and onboarding support.

"And just like an employee, you can talk to it however you'd like. You can send it emails, you can talk to it on Slack, or you can invite it to your meetings and collaborate with it however you'd like," said Flo Crivello, Founder and CEO of Lindy.
