I have always been fascinated by Monarch Butterflies and this is OUR small way of helping them regain their threatened population. Thank you, for supporting the Monarch Butterflies!”

monarchs are in serious trouble. The migration is collapsing,” said Emma Pelton, a senior conservation biologist with the Xerces Society. “We must move quickly to safeguard existing monarch habitat and restore and better manage the landscapes monarchs depend on, or else we risk losing one of North America’s most incredible natural phenomena. What can people do to help?

Plant Native Milkweed: Monarch caterpillars eat only milkweed. Choose varieties native to your specific region (such as narrow-leaf milkweed in California) and avoid non-native tropical milkweed, which can harbor parasites. <https://share.google/PycXpwXLkxDkHa1vI>

One way to grow Native Milkweed plants is from seeds which is included bundle.
