DUBAI, UNITED ARAB EMIRATES, September 7, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Akii Technologies Ltd, an AI venture builder, today announced the launch of Marquorum, the affiliate network for creators. Marquorum connects creators with AI subscription products they can recommend to their audiences, recurring commission opportunities, and a meaningful role in choosing what gets built next.

Marquorum debuts with Revenue Scout, an AI-powered platform that helps businesses discover, qualify and act on sales opportunities across Reddit, LinkedIn, X, Facebook, Instagram, TikTok and YouTube.

Revenue Scout finds people expressing a current need for what a business sells. It analyzes buying intent and product fit, filters out weak matches, and ranks the strongest opportunities. It also prepares replies grounded in each public conversation and the business’s own product information. Teams can focus on reviewing opportunities and responding to potential customers, rather than searching platforms, qualifying leads and writing replies from scratch.

Users review, edit and post replies manually from their own social accounts. Revenue Scout does not automatically post. Platform coverage and prepared-reply quotas vary by plan. A Free plan is available without a credit card.

Revenue Scout is designed for social media managers, agencies, founders, consultants and other businesses whose prospective customers discuss problems, seek recommendations and compare solutions in public.

Josef Holm founded Marquorum after nearly 30 years in affiliate marketing and a career spanning digital products, online marketing, venture capital, crowdfunding, blockchain and Web3.

That experience revealed a recurring gap. Creators build trusted audiences, but many lack the time, team or desire to build and operate subscription software. Even those who can create a convincing demo face a different challenge when it comes to billing, customer support, reliability, maintenance and continuous updates.

“AI has made software faster to create, but it has not solved product selection, dependable operation, or distribution,” said Holm, founder of Marquorum.

Akii Technologies directly funds, builds, owns and operates the products. Marquorum connects that product operation with partner participation in product selection and distribution.

“Akii accepts the long-term responsibility for the products,” Holm said. “We fund them, build them, own them, and operate them. Marquorum allows partners to contribute the opportunity, the vote, audience knowledge, and distribution without asking them to become software operators or investors.”

Approved partners receive product research, promotional assets, direct product links, a reusable partner code and downloadable QR codes. They choose products that fit their audiences and explain them through tutorials, reviews, newsletters, videos and educational content.

Under the current Revenue Scout offer, partners can earn 30 percent recurring commission on eligible paid subscriptions for the customer subscription lifetime. They can also earn 5 percent second-tier commission on eligible commissions earned by affiliates they refer.

Eligible balances are paid monthly in US dollars through PayPal once the payable balance reaches USD 50. Commissions remain subject to published terms and the applicable offer schedule. Earnings depend on audience fit, reach, customer demand and retained subscriptions.

Under Marquorum’s product-selection model, partners with tracked traffic and/or sales during the preceding 30 days can propose and vote on future products distributed through the network.

Akii qualifies opportunities before a binding ballot, then follows the result and builds and operates the new product.

The launch expands Akii Technologies' portfolio alongside Akii.com, its active GEO, SEO and AI commerce business. Akii.com continues serving its customers as the company brings new products to market through Marquorum.

Businesses can explore Revenue Scout and start free. Creators can learn more and apply through Marquorum.
