With Hispanic Heritage Month just around the corner, Pikitin, announces the launch of its new line of bilingual early childhood products. These innovative resources, designed to reinforce second-language learning and help Hispanic families preserve their roots and culture, are now available to the public in the United States and worldwide through its official website.

Pikitin's new collection offers high-quality pedagogical tools for both the home and the classroom, focusing on the cognitive and cultural development of young learners. Through pikitin.com, parents and educators can now access the following new releases:

The Musical Mat (Piano Mat): An APPA award-winning interactive toy featuring traditional Hispanic songs. This play mat allows children to explore music and culture through physical movement.
¡Hola, Tren!: An educational program specifically designed to foster comprehensive development and active learning in preschool-aged children.

Jean Perrin: A touching literary work that illustrates how an immigrant child from the Caribbean adapts to a new culture while learning English. This story serves as a vital mirror and support

My Patio Friends: A series of bilingual magazines created to support second-language acquisition, providing families with hands-on activities and resources to continue educating their children at home.

Behind Pikitin's vision is its creator and founder, Rita Rosa Ruesga, a renowned Cuban early childhood educator, author, and children's music expert. Ruesga's dedication to cultural and pedagogical excellence has been widely celebrated in the music industry, earning a total of five Latin Grammy nominations for her musical productions.

"Our mission is to build bridges between early education and cultural identity," says Ruesga. "We want families to have access to modern, engaging resources so their children can learn English without losing pride in their Hispanic roots."
