A Dallas Legacy, A National Mission

Andrew Hillman brings more than three decades of experience in business growth, revenue optimization, and leadership development to this initiative. His entrepreneurial roots trace back to Dallas, where his grandfather, the late Henry B. Levine, built Midway Auto Supply into a trusted community institution in 1959. That early exposure to hard work, hands-on business ownership, and community-minded leadership continues to shape the way Andrew Hillman mentors founders today. As a co-founder and mentor, Andrew Hillman has helped numerous companies streamline operations and achieve sustainable profitability across industries far beyond Dallas.

Through the creation of this scholarship, Andrew Hillman channels that same Dallas work ethic into a national platform, offering emerging entrepreneurs both financial support and public recognition as they pursue their business ambitions. It is a full-circle moment: a Dallas entrepreneur building a launchpad for the next wave of business leaders, wherever they call home.

The Andrew Hillman Scholarship for Entrepreneurs underscores Andrew Hillman's belief that investing in driven, forward-thinking students today helps shape the business leaders of tomorrow.
