

InventionHome® Inventor Spotlight: Doctors Office Bed with Safety Pole

PITTSBURGH, PA, UNITED STATES, September 9, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- For Mirian K. of Sarasota, FL, the idea of a Doctors Office Bed with Safety Pole grew from her own experiences with disabilities and mobility challenges. She found herself avoiding doctor visits because of concerns about safely getting onto and off of a traditional examination table. That personal experience prompted her to think about how examination tables could provide patients with greater stability and a greater sense of security.

"I have all sorts of disabilities, and I keep avoiding going to the doctor, afraid of using the examination table," said Mirian.

The patent-pending Doctors Office Bed with Safety Pole is designed to provide additional support for patients as they enter and exit an examination table. Support poles positioned alongside the table steps give patients a sturdy handhold as they climb up or down, which help them distribute their weight and navigate the table with greater independence. The concept is focused on individuals experiencing arthritis, arthrosis, joint pain, muscle weakness, balance difficulties, or other conditions that can make traditional examination tables challenging to use.

For Mirian, the invention is about more than modifying a piece of medical equipment. It is about addressing a need she has experienced herself. She hopes the idea can help patients feel more confident during routine medical visits while also reducing the physical assistance that healthcare staff may need to provide. Looking ahead, she hopes to continue developing ideas that address practical challenges in healthcare and create new possibilities for people who, like her, are living with mobility limitations.
