Peck Law Group Marks National Assisted Living Week With One Question Every Family Should Ask

A timely reminder for families navigating long-term care.

LOS ANGELES, CA, UNITED STATES, September 10, 2026 / EINPresswire.com/ -- National Assisted Living Week® takes place September 13–19. This year's theme, “Shining Through the Years,” recognizes assisted living residents, their experiences, and the people who support their care.

For families with a loved one in assisted living, the week is also a useful reminder to consider whether the care being provided still matches that person's needs.

In recognition of the week, the Peck Law Group is encouraging families to stay involved as a loved one's health, mobility, or cognitive needs change.

A person's care needs can change over time, and the support that once worked may no longer be enough.

Those changes can happen gradually, which makes it important to keep evaluating whether the care setting still fits.

The Question to Keep Asking
Can this facility safely meet my loved one's needs — and will it continue to do so as those needs change?

It is a simple question, but it can help families focus on what matters most.

If a resident becomes less mobile, has difficulty eating or drinking, experiences cognitive decline, or begins needing more supervision, families should ask how those changes are being addressed. Who is monitoring the resident's condition? Has the care plan changed? Can the facility provide the additional support now required?

“If there is a problem with a loved one at a long-term-care facility, bring it to the administrator or Director of Nursing right away and document the conversation,” said Steven C. Peck, founder of the Peck Law Group.

Those conversations can help clarify what comes next.

As a loved one's needs change, the questions should as well.
