Startup Costs Rise in 2026 as Entrepreneurs Look to Cut Office Overhead

Office space remains one of the largest startup costs in 2026. Use code OVERHEAD100 to waive the $100 setup fee and launch without the overhead.

BOCA RATON, FL, UNITED STATES, September 11, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Office space is the single biggest startup cost most new business owners underestimate. Physical storefront and office-based businesses can require $50,000 to $250,000 or more to launch, with rent alone running $200 to $5,000 per employee per month, plus another $2,000 to $50,000 in build-out and deposits before a single customer walks in. For many first-time founders, that one line item rivals or exceeds their entire remaining budget combined.

> “Every dollar not spent on office overhead is a dollar to put toward what actually grows the business. You don't need four walls to look like a real one. You need the right address.”

That is why a growing number of entrepreneurs are skipping the lease entirely. Lean, service-based businesses now routinely launch for under $10,000, but going lean does not mean going invisible: a home address or no address at all still undercuts the credibility every new business needs from day one.

Enter Opus Virtual Offices, a leading provider of virtual office solutions with 650-plus locations across the United States. For $99 a month, a fraction of a single month's office rent in most markets, new businesses get a prestigious commercial address, a live receptionist answering calls in their company's name Monday through Friday, professional mail handling, and a dedicated business phone number, with no long-term contract.

"Every dollar a new business doesn't spend on office overhead is a dollar it can put toward the things that actually grow it, marketing, hiring, or simply staying afloat through the first year," said Yori Galel, CEO of Opus Virtual Offices. "You don't need four walls to look like a real business. You need the right address."

The setup fee is waived for a limited time. Sign up today at opusvirtualoffices.com with promo code OVERHEAD100, and launch with the professional presence a $50,000 office would buy, for $99 a month.
