Fall and winter typically bring a surge in demand for the following year's weddings and end of the year corporate parties throughout the region, which is why early booking matters. The company recommends reserving catering at least one month in advance for larger events, giving planners time to finalize menus, staffing, and other details, since waiting too long can limit availability during the busiest stretches of the season.

Founded in 2012 by chef Mavis Linnemann-Clark, The Delish Dish grew from a home-based personal chef service into a certified woman-owned catering company serving the region, with from-scratch cooking, customized menus, and hands-on planning support defining its approach since its earliest days.

Beyond food preparation, the company provides event management services including venue decoration, equipment rentals, and staffing such as servers, bartenders, and event managers, according to the company. Clients can choose from serving styles like buffet, family-style, or plated dinners depending on the tone and format of their event.

Menus at The Delish Dish are built around each client's needs rather than a fixed template, with options including vegetarian, vegan, gluten-free, and allergen-free choices so hosts can accommodate guests with diverse dietary requirements. This flexibility applies across event types, whether a wedding reception, corporate luncheon, or private milestone celebration.

Currently, third-party assessment of the caterer's performance in meeting the expectations of their clients is revealed by The Delish Dish earning 182 Google reviews of five stars and their inclusion in "The Knot: Best of Weddings Hall of Fame."

Individuals and organizations with fall or winter 2026 events on the calendar are encouraged to reach out to The Delish Dish soon to discuss menu options and secure a date. Given the seasonal demand for weddings and corporate events in the region, prompt inquiries improve the likelihood of getting a preferred date with full customization support.
