

High Rock Preserve Opens Reservations Ahead of North Carolina Upland Bird Season

High Rock Upland Game Preserve invites hunters to plan guided and self-guided pheasant, quail, and chukar experiences ahead of the October 1 season opening.

LEXINGTON, NC, UNITED STATES, September 11, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- High Rock Upland Game Preserve is welcoming reservations for the upcoming North Carolina controlled hunting preserve season, giving hunters an opportunity to plan fall and winter outings for pheasant, quail, chukar, and mixed-bird hunts across the preserve's scenic Lexington property.

North Carolina allows the taking of domestically raised game birds on controlled hunting preserves from October 1 through March 31. At High Rock Preserve, hunters can choose between self-guided outings and fully guided experiences, with options designed for different skill levels, group sizes, and preferences.

The preserve features carefully maintained upland terrain across rolling hills, hardwood forests, open meadows, and natural corridors. Hunts are designed to provide the challenge and tradition associated with upland bird hunting while giving guests the flexibility to choose the experience that best matches their comfort and experience in the field.

The experience extends beyond the birds themselves. High Rock Preserve's rolling hills, hardwood forests, open meadows, and expansive views create a setting where time in the field can become as memorable as the hunt. For families, friends, and longtime hunting partners, an outing offers an opportunity to slow down, enjoy the landscape, and share the camaraderie that has always been an important part of upland hunting tradition.

Guided hunts are available for hunters who want additional support during their outing. High Rock's guided packages include a dedicated guide and selected bird package, with half-day, half-day-plus, and full-day experiences available. Full-day packages can also include meals, snacks and drinks, on-site transportation, full-property access for qualifying groups, and additional customization by request.

For hunters comparing affordable guided hunting trips in North Carolina, High Rock Preserve publishes its hunt and guided-package pricing online so guests can compare bird quantities, trip lengths, and included amenities before making a reservation. Guests may also bring their own dogs, and larger or more customized experiences can be arranged directly with the preserve.

Self-guided hunts provide another option for experienced hunters who prefer to move through the fields independently. Quail, pheasant, chukar, and mixed-bird packages are available, allowing visitors to tailor an outing around the type and number of birds they would like to hunt.

High Rock is an upland game preserve built around more than the hunt itself. The property also offers hiking and ATV trails, scenic outdoor areas, and private land rental opportunities for groups seeking additional ways to experience the property. Its general land rental program provides access to 330 acres for activities including family gatherings, retreats, outdoor recreation, hiking, trail riding, and customized group experiences.

Families and visitors looking for a slower outdoor experience can also explore Kari's Berries, a seasonal fruit-picking area within High Rock Preserve. The area offers maintained berry patches and a relaxed setting for individuals, families, and small groups to spend time outdoors and connect with the land.

High Rock Preserve welcomes both experienced upland hunters and those newer to the sport. Hunters age 16 and older must hold an appropriate North Carolina hunting license before participating in a preserve hunt, and all participants are required to complete the preserve's liability waiver before entering the field.

Reservations are currently available for upcoming hunts and private land rentals. Hunters interested in planning a pheasant, quail, chukar, or mixed-bird outing can review current packages and availability at highrockpreserve.com or contact High Rock Preserve directly at 866-999-0930.

Fall is what much of the year builds toward at High Rock Preserve. We put a lot of thought into maintaining the land and creating hunting experiences that feel challenging, well-run, and connected to the tradition of upland hunting. But just as important are the incredible views and the time spent in the field with family and friends. Those conversations, shared experiences, and memories are a big part of what makes a day at High Rock special, whether someone joins us for a guided hunt or heads into the field on their own.
