

AIVG Holdings Invites Florida Counties to Evaluate VELMAND Ahead of HB 803 Deadlines

Counties are already writing the capabilities VELMAND was built for into their own bids. The evaluation file a county needs is prepared and waiting.

LARGO, FL, UNITED STATES, September 11, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Today, AIVG Holdings began inviting Florida building departments to evaluate VELMAND, its permitting and code-enforcement platform, and said the research and documentation a county needs are already prepared and waiting. The invitations go out as House Bill 803 (HB 803) puts the state's building departments on hard new statutory deadlines.

While the current invitations referenced in this release are limited to Florida, VELMAND is available nationwide. Counties all over the United States are writing new requirements into their own public solicitations. In one Washington State county, a 2026 request for proposals asks for a configurable fee engine and a complete, immutable audit trail of who did what, when, and why, with no programming needed from the vendor.

VELMAND was built to meet these emerging requirements and the company tracked that demand before it wrote a word of marketing. Nothing VELMAND claims to do is a roadmap item. The features and functionality are available today.

"Counties are telling the market exactly what they need, in their own bid documents," said Angela Irizarry, founder of AIVG Holdings. "I read them, I built to them, and I made sure the whole evaluation file was not only ready, but also defensible before asking a single county to evaluate the platform. A building department can open it today and see the work, not a sales pitch."

Florida's HB 803 legislation includes statutory decision deadlines as short as five business days and a uniform digital application arriving in 2027. A department that misses a deadline runs the risk of losing permit revenue automatically. All of Florida's county building departments face the same clock at once.

Rather than ask a county to take any of this on faith, AIVG Holdings prepared a series of due diligence documents before any formal evaluation invitations were distributed. A county official accesses a private, encrypted document portal that includes a clause-by-clause overview of HB 803 tied to the specific mechanism VELMAND provides, a security and data-governance summary, a data-location and continuity disclosure, a sole-source justification, the pricing and licensing model, and a sample cooperative-purchasing agreement. The same portal contains a recorded walkthrough of a permit run from application to decision on the live system.

VELMAND is available now. No county is yet in production on it. AIVG Holdings is scheduling private briefings for building officials, county administrators, and commissioners, who would like to read the documentation and see a live demonstration on their unique requirements. Briefings can be requested at velmand.com or by emailing info@velmand.com.
