Vanessa Béjine Submits 'Help Me Help Them' for 2027 Grammy® Consideration

HOLLYWOOD, CA, UNITED STATES, September 13, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Independent Christian-pop artist brings a message of faith, compassion and perseverance to the Grammy season with campaign support from Social Dragon PR

For Your GRAMMY® Consideration

Vanessa Béjine is taking her music and message to the next level with the submission of "Help Me Help Them" for 2027 Grammy® Awards consideration, putting the independent Christian-pop singer-songwriter into the conversation surrounding the upcoming Grammy season.

For Béjine, the campaign is about more than awards recognition. It is an opportunity to introduce a song—and an artistic mission—built around compassion, faith and the belief that people can find hope even during their most difficult seasons.

"Help Me Help Them" reflects the core of Béjine's songwriting. Her music draws from experiences of waiting, resilience and perseverance, transforming those emotions into contemporary pop songs that blend heartfelt storytelling with uplifting and cinematic sounds.

Her message is straightforward: you are never alone, and your story is not finished.
A song with a purpose Béjine's music has always carried a sense of mission. Alongside writing songs about faith and personal resilience, the artist has used her platform to encourage compassion for both people and animals in need. That purpose is at the center of "Help Me Help Them."

Rather than simply documenting her own journey, Béjine turns the song outward, asking listeners to consider how faith can inspire compassion and action. It is a natural progression for an artist whose catalog includes titles such as "Perseverance," "Humble," "Victory," "Flourish," "Your Word," "Fight" and "Renegade."

Her 2024 album Baal-Perazim—a title associated with the idea of breakthroughs—further established the spiritual foundation of her work. Now, “Help Me Help Them” adds another dimension to that story. Building an independent audience Béjine arrives at the Grammy campaign with an audience already taking notice.

Her song “Humble” reached No. 6 on a Top 40 countdown and earned radio support in London. That independent momentum has helped Béjine carve out a space in contemporary Christian pop without sacrificing the personal storytelling that defines her music.

Her sound moves between pop ballads, dance-oriented tracks and cinematic anthems, but the emotional center remains consistent: faith in the middle of uncertainty.

Béjine's 2027 Grammy For Your Consideration campaign is being supported by Social Dragon PR, a Recording Academy Media Company Member participating in the Academy's official submission process. The relationship gives the independent artist an experienced public-relations team behind her Grammy-season campaign, including efforts to increase awareness of her music among industry audiences and Grammy voters.

The Academy's Grammy process allows eligible recordings to be submitted for consideration, followed by screening and voting stages. A For Your Consideration submission does not constitute a Grammy nomination; nominees are ultimately determined through the Recording Academy's voting process.

For Béjine, however, reaching this stage is already a significant moment. An independent artist with a growing international audience is now placing a song about compassion and service before the music industry's most prominent awards institution.

“God is still writing your story”
Perhaps the most revealing line in Béjine's biography is also the simplest: “God is still writing your story.” It is a sentiment that explains much of what she creates.
Her songs don't pretend that perseverance is easy. Instead, they acknowledge the difficult chapters while searching for meaning beyond them.

That perspective gives “Help Me Help Them” its larger significance within Béjine's Grammy® campaign. The song isn't simply another release in an expanding catalog. It represents the artist's belief that music can become a vehicle for empathy—and that an artist's platform can be used to help others.

As the 2027 Grammy season moves forward, Vanessa Béjine is bringing an independent voice, a faith-centered perspective and a song with a purpose into the conversation.
“Help Me Help Them” is officially For Your Grammy Consideration. And for Béjine, the next chapter is just beginning.
