The first segment, "Plant-Based Wellness: What Makes Plant Stem Cells Unique," explores the rich nutritional profile of plant embryonic tissues, which are abundant in growth factors, nucleic acids, amino acids, enzymes, exosomes, and peptides. Payeur explains to viewers why these components are so distinctive and why they are increasingly recognized as highly efficient tools for health support.

Bloom gave us a wonderful opportunity to bring gemmotherapy to a mainstream audience. So many people are searching for natural, effective ways to support their health.”

The second segment, "Gemmotherapy: How Plant Stem Cells Create Homeostasis," delves deeper into the practice of gemmotherapy. It is a form of botanical medicine that harnesses the embryonic stem cells found in the buds and seeds of plants harvested in the springtime. In this segment, Payeur also shares her personal story: how a life-threatening health crisis led her away from a nearly three-decade career in financial services and toward a profound reconnection with the natural world, ultimately becoming the foundation for her life's work.

"Bloom gave us a wonderful opportunity to bring gemmotherapy to a mainstream audience," said Payeur. "So many people are searching for natural, effective ways to support their health, and plant stem cell therapy offers something truly extraordinary. I'm grateful for the chance to share both the science and my personal story with their viewers."

The interview follows a series of recent milestones for Payeur, including a feature in The Townsend Letter, one of the most respected publications in integrative and naturopathic medicine, which spotlighted her new book, Ancient Plant Wisdom: How to Improve and Maintain Your Health Using Concentrated Plant Stem Cell Remedies. (The book is available now through major booksellers and covers more than 70 plant stem cell remedies and addresses over 100 chronic and degenerative conditions.)
